MONEY MARKET.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

On balance, only a small amount of gold was sent into the Bank to-day, but about £300,000, chiefly from Melbourne, is expected to be received to-morrow. The total now on the way from Australia and China is £[illegible], of which about half is due in a few days. The shipment of this metal from the former country has temporarily ceased, an Orient steamer having just left for London with none on board. The French exchange is rather lower. Discounts were easy at [illegible] per cent. for three months' bills, with exceptional transactions at a fraction below. Short money was in fair demand at [illegible], owing to the payment on the City of Rosario Loan, and preparations for the instalments due to-morrow on the Canadian issues. A considerable total has also to be returned to the Bank during the next few days. Early next month the market will be disturbed by arrangements for the repayment of the balance, amounting to about [illegible], of the Indian Four per Ct. Loan. At Paris the outside rate of discount is [illegible] per cent., and at Berlin [illegible], being considerably below official terms in each case. The St. Petersburg quotation is still 7 per cent., or [illegible] above the charge here.

Business in the Stock markets has been active, and an almost general rise occurred. The tone was decidedly buoyant throughout the day, purchases being stimulated by the fine weather and the expected influx of a large amount of gold to the Bank. Moreover, higher prices were received from the Bourses, favourable English railway traffic returns were issued, and the impression has increased that, with peace, trade will further expand. Many transactions took place in Home lines at a further improvement. Caledonian and Great Western rose 1, each, Brighton "A" 1½, and most of the other stocks ½ to 1. A strong upward movement was apparent in the American department, mainly due to the news that all the trunk railroads have raised their grain rates and that some of the companies were about to increase their charges for the carriage of dressed beef. The chief variation was a rise of 3½ in Denver Preference, which were specially affected by a rumour that a dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum is about to be paid on these shares in cash. An important advance was also reported in Milwaukees, Louisvilles, Atlantic Firsts, Union Pacifics, Eries, Lake Shores, and Wabash. Grand Trunks fully shared in the recovery, owing partly to the announcement about dressed-beef rates, and partly to the statement that the American Senate is not likely to pass the Retaliation bill. The Second Preference rose nearly 4 per cent., while the first was 3½ up, the third 1½, and the Guaranteed 2½. Canadian Pacifics were likewise better, besides Mexican (Vera Cruz) and Ottoman shares and debentures.

Foreign Government bonds experienced an almost general advance, this market being greatly strengthened by the improvement abroad. Ecuador, Egyptian, Greek, Guatemala, Hungarian, and Portuguese were in prominent request. French, Italian, Russian, Spanish, Turkish, and Venezuelan likewise showed firmness, but Cedulas were rather dull, on the notification that the premium on gold at Buenos Ayres has risen to 48½ per cent. No striking change was observable in the Funds. The principal feature in miscellaneous securities was the strong demand for some of the nitrate companies. On the other hand, brewery undertakings were offered. As regards mines, Tintos rose about ⅛, and Kimberley Central and De Beers were up a little.

At the Bank £73,000, chiefly in French coin, was bought, and 60,000 sovereigns were taken out for Lisbon and the Cape. During the week there has been a net efflux of £220,000.

The Arcadia, from Melbourne, has arrived with £277,000 in sovereigns.

No alteration occurred in bar silver, the price being 41 3-16d per ounce. It is understood that this quotation is very near the figure that would bring supplies from India, and the market is consequently less firm. Bombay transfers improved 1-16d, and Calcutta 3-32d, to 1s 4½d in each case. Rupee Paper was active, but finally unchanged. The Four and a Half per Cents. closed at 73, ¼, and the Four per Cents. at 69, ¼.

Firmness was again reported on the Continental Bourses. At Berlin, Prussian Three and a Half per Cents., Egyptian Unified, Spanish, Italian, Hungarian, Austrian, and Mexican improved, but Deutsche Bank and Lombardo gave way. The movements in Paris included an advance in Credit Foncier, Greek, Ottoman Bank, Rio Tinto, Suez Canal, Panama, and Portuguese. At 83f 60c, the Three per Cent. Rentes were 5c lower; but the Four and a Half per Cents. advanced 7½c, to 106f. The exchange on London (cheques) fell ½c, to 25f 41½c.

Tenders were received at the Bank of England for £250,000 India Council Bills and Telegraphic Transfers, and the following allotments were made: Bills on Calcutta £100,100, and on Bombay £99,900. Transfers on Calcutta, £50,000. Tenders for Bills at 1s 4 21-32d will receive about 36 per cent. of the amount applied for, and for Transfers at 1s 4 13-16d in full. The total of Bills and Transfers sold from April 1 to yesterday was Rs. 87,186,000, realising £[illegible]. Next week tenders will again be received for £250,000.

From the report of the North British Railway Company it appears that the receipts for the half-year were £1,300,235 19s 6d, against £1,304,314 7s 3d in the corresponding period of 1887, showing an increase of £55,921 9s 3d, while the expenditure was £627,285 13s 5d, against £621,816 15s 1d, or £5,478 18s 4d more. It is proposed to pay a dividend at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum on the ordinary stock, and ½ on Edinburgh and Glasgow Ordinary, as previously mentioned. Reference is also made to the division of the Ordinary stock.

The following official comparative statement of the revenue receipts of the Cape Colony for the months of July, 1887 and 1888 respectively, has been received:

THE WHITECHAPEL MURDERS.

In the Whitechapel Working Lads' Institute, yesterday afternoon, Mr. Wynne E. Baxter, Coroner for East Middlesex, resumed his inquiry respecting the death of Mrs. Annie Chapman, who was found dead in the yard of the house 29, Hanbury-street, Whitechapel, her body dreadfully cut and mutilated, early on the morning of Saturday, the 8th inst. The following evidence was called:

Eliza Cooper: I am a hawker, and lodge in Dorset-street, Spitalfields. Have done so for the last five months. I knew the deceased, and had a quarrel with her on the Tuesday before she was murdered. The quarrel arose in this way: On the previous Saturday she brought Mr. Stanley into the house where I lodged in Dorset-street, and coming into the kitchen asked the people to give her some soap. They told her to ask "Liza"—meaning me. She came to me, and I opened the locker and gave her some. She gave it to Stanley, who went outside and washed himself in the lavatory. When she came back I asked for the soap, but she did not return it. She said, "I will see you by and bye." Mr. Stanley gave her two shillings, and paid for her bed for two nights. I saw no more of her that night. On the following Tuesday I saw her in the kitchen of the lodging-house. I said, "Perhaps you will return my soap." She threw a halfpenny on the table, and said, "Go and get a halfpennyworth of soap." We got quarrelling over this piece of soap, and we went out to the Ringers Public-house and continued the quarrel. She slapped my face, and said, "Think yourself lucky I don't do more." I struck her in the left eye, I believe, and then in the chest. I afterwards saw that the blow I gave her had marked her face.

When was the last time you saw her alive?—On the Thursday night, in the Ringers.

Was she wearing rings?—Yes, she was wearing three rings on the middle finger of the left hand. They were all brass.

Had she ever a gold wedding ring to your knowledge?—No, not since I have known her. I have known her about fifteen months. I know she associated with Stanley, "Harry the Hawker," and several others.

The Foreman: Are there any of those with whom she associated missing?—I could not tell.

A Juryman: Was she on the same relations with them as she was with Stanley?—No, sir. She used to bring them casually into the lodging-house.

Dr. Phillips, divisional surgeon of the metropolitan police, was then recalled.

The Coroner, before asking him to give evidence, said: Whatever may be your opinion and objections, it appears to me necessary that all the evidence that you ascertained from the post-mortem examination should be on the records of the Court for various reasons, which I need not enumerate. However painful it may be, it is necessary in the interests of justice.

Dr. Phillips: I have not had any notice of that. I should have been glad if notice had been given me, because I should have been better prepared to give the evidence; however, I will do my best.

The Coroner: Would you like to postpone it?

Dr. Phillips: Oh, no. I will do my best. I still think that it is a very great pity to make this evidence public. Of course, I bow to your decision; but there are matters which have come to light now which show the wisdom of the course pursued on the last occasion, and I cannot help reiterating my regret that you have come to a different conclusion. On the last occasion, just before I left the court, I mentioned to you that there were reasons why I thought the perpetrator of the act upon the woman's throat had caught hold of her chin. These reasons were that just below the lobe of the left ear were three scratches, and there was also a bruise on the right cheek. When I come to speak of the wounds on the lower part of the body I must again repeat my opinion that it is highly injudicious to make the results of my examination public. These details are fit only for yourself, sir, and the jury, but to make them public would simply be disgusting.

The Coroner: We are here in the interests of justice, and must have all the evidence before us. I see, however, that there are several ladies and boys in the room, and I think they might retire. (Two ladies and a number of newspaper messenger boys accordingly left the court.)

Dr. Phillips again raised an objection to the evidence, remarking: In giving these details to the public I believe you are thwarting the ends of justice.

The Coroner: We are bound to take all the evidence in the case, and whether it be made public or not is a matter for the responsibility of the press.

The Foreman: We are of opinion that the evidence the doctor on the last occasion wished to keep back should be heard. (Several Jurymen: Hear, hear.)

The Coroner: I have carefully considered the matter and have never before heard of any evidence requested being kept back.

Dr. Phillips: I have not kept it back; I have only suggested whether it should be given or not.

The Coroner: We have delayed taking this evidence as long as possible, because you said the interests of justice might be served by keeping it back; but it is now a fortnight since this occurred, and I do not see why it should be kept back from the jury any longer.

Dr. Phillips: I am of opinion that what I am about to describe took place after death, so that it could not affect the cause of death, which you are inquiring into.

The Coroner: That is only your opinion, and might be repudiated by other medical opinion.

Dr. Phillips: Very well. I will give you the results of my post-mortem examination. Witness then detailed the terrible wounds which had been inflicted upon the woman, and described the parts of the body which the perpetrator of the murder had carried away with him. He added: I am of opinion that the length of the weapon with which the incisions were inflicted was at least five to six inches in length—probably more—and must have been very sharp. The manner in which they had been done indicated a certain amount of anatomical knowledge.

The Coroner: Can you give any idea how long it would take to perform the incisions found on the body?

Dr. Phillips: I think I can guide you by saying that I myself could not have performed all the injuries I saw on that woman, and effect them, even without a struggle, under a quarter of an hour. If I had done it in a deliberate way, such as would fall to the duties of a surgeon, it would probably have taken me the best part of an hour. The whole inference seems to me that the operation was performed to enable the perpetrator to obtain possession of these parts of the body.

The Coroner: Have you anything further to add with reference to the stains on the wall?

Dr. Phillips: I have not been able to obtain any further traces of blood on the wall.

The Foreman: Is there anything to indicate that the crime in the case of the woman Nichols was perpetrated with the same object as this?

The Coroner: There is a difference in this respect, at all events, that the medical expert is of opinion that, in the case of Nichols, the mutilations were made first.

The Foreman: Was any photograph of the eyes of the deceased taken, in case they should retain any impression of the murderer?

Dr. Phillips: I have no particular opinion upon that point myself. I was asked about it very early in the inquiry, and I gave my opinion that the operation would be useless, especially in this case. The use of a bloodhound was also suggested. It may be my ignorance, but the blood around was that of the murdered woman, and it would be more likely to be traced than the murderer. These questions were submitted to me by the police very early. I think within twenty-four hours of the murder of the woman.

The Coroner: Were the injuries to the face and neck such as might have produced insensibility?

The witness: Yes, they were consistent with partial suffocation.

Mrs. Elizabeth Long said: I live in Church-row, Whitechapel, and my husband, James Long, is a cart minder. On Saturday, Sept. 8, about half-past five o'clock in the morning, I was passing down Hanbury-street, from home, on my way to Spitalfields Market. I knew the time, because I heard the brewer's clock strike half-past five just before I got to the street. I passed 29, Hanbury-street. On the right-hand side, the same side as the house, I saw a man and a woman standing on the pavement talking. The man's back was turned towards Brick-lane, and the woman's was towards the market. They were standing only a few yards nearer Brick-lane from 29, Hanbury-street. I saw the woman's face. Have seen the deceased in the mortuary, and I am sure the woman that I saw in Hanbury-street was the deceased. I did not see the man's face, but I noticed that he was dark. He was wearing a brown low-crowned felt hat. I think he had on a dark coat, though I am not certain. By the look of him he seemed to me a man over forty years of age. He appeared to me to be a little taller than the deceased.

Did he look like a working man, or what?—He looked like a foreigner.

Did he look like a dock labourer, or a workman, or what?—I should say he looked like what I should call shabby-genteel.

Were they talking loudly?—They were talking pretty loudly. I overheard him say to her "Will you?" and she replied, "Yes." That is all I heard, and I heard this as I passed. I left them standing there, and I did not look back, so I cannot say where they went to.

Did they appear to be sober?—I saw nothing to indicate that either of them was the worse for drink.

Was it not an unusual thing to see a man and a woman standing there talking?—Oh no. I see lots of them standing there in the morning.

At that hour of the day?—Yes; that is why I did not take much notice of them.

You are certain about the time?—Quite.

What time did you leave home?—I got out about five o'clock, and I reached the Spitalfields Market a few minutes after half-past five.

The Foreman of the jury: What brewer's clock did you hear strike half-past five?—The brewer's in Brick-lane.

Edward Stanley, Osborn-place, Osborn-street, Spitalfields, deposed: I am a bricklayer's labourer.

The Coroner: Are you known by the name of the Pensioner?—Yes.

Did you know the deceased?—I did.

And you sometimes visited her?—Yes.

At 35, Dorset-street?—About once there, or twice, something like that. Other times I have met her elsewhere.

When did you last see her alive?—On Sunday, Sept. 2, between one and three o'clock in the afternoon.

Was she wearing rings when you saw her?—Yes, I believe two. I could not say on which finger, but they were on one of her fingers.

What sort of rings were they—what was the metal?—Brass, I should think by the look of them.

Do you know any one she was on bad terms with?—No one, so far as I know. The last time I saw her she had some bruises on her face—a slight black eye, which some other woman had given her. I did not take much notice of it. She told me something about having had a quarrel. It is possible that I may have seen deceased after Sept. 2, as I was doing nothing all that week. If I did see her I only casually met her, and we might have had a glass of beer together. My memory is rather confused about it.

The Coroner: The deputy of the lodging-house said he was told not to let the bed to the deceased with any other man but you?—It was not from me he received those orders. I have seen it described that the man used to come on the Saturday night, and remain until the Monday morning. I have never done so.

The Foreman: You were supposed to be the pensioner.

The Coroner: It must be some other man?

Witness: I cannot say; I am only speaking for myself.

Are you a pensioner?—Can I object to answer that question, sir? It does not touch on anything here.

Coroner: It was said the man was with her on one occasion when going to receive his pension?

Witness: Then it could not have been me. It has been stated all over Europe that it was me, but it was not.

The Coroner: It will affect your financial position all over Europe when it is known that you are not a pensioner?—It will affect my financial position in this way, sir, in that I am a loser by having to come here for nothing, and may get discharged for not being at my work.

Were you ever in the Royal Sussex Regiment?—Never, sir. I am a law-abiding man, sir, and interfere with no person who does not interfere with me.

The Coroner: Call the deputy.

Timothy Donovan, deputy of the lodging-house, who gave evidence on a previous occasion, was then recalled.

The Coroner: Did ever you see that man (pointing to Stanley) before?—Yes.

Is he the man you call "the pensioner"?—Yes.

Was it he who used to come with the deceased on Saturday and stay till Monday?—Yes.

Was it he who told you not to let the bed to the deceased with any other man?—Yes; on the second Saturday he told me.

How many times have you seen him there?—I should think five or six Saturdays.

When was he last there?—On the Saturday before the woman's death. He stayed until the Monday. He paid for one night, and the woman afterwards came down and paid for the other.

The Coroner: What have you got to say to that, Mr. Stanley?

Stanley: You can cross it all out, sir.

Cross your evidence out, you mean?—Oh, no; not mine, but his. It is all wrong. I went to Gosport on Aug. 6 and remained there until Sept. 1.

The Coroner: Probably the deputy has made a mistake.

A Juror (to Stanley): Had you known deceased at Windsor at all?—No; she told me she knew some one about Windsor, and that she once lived there.

You did not know her there?—No; I have only known her about two years. I have never been to Windsor.

Did you call at Dorset-street on Saturday, the 8th, after the murder?—Yes; I was told by a shoeblack it was she who was murdered, and I went to the lodging-house to ask if it was the fact. I was surprised, and went away.

Did you not give any information to the police that you knew her? You might have volunteered evidence, you know?—I did volunteer evidence. I went voluntarily to Commercial-street Police-station, and told them what I knew.

The Coroner: They did not tell you that the police wanted you?—Not on the 8th, but afterwards. They told me the police wanted to see me after I had been to the police.

Albert Cadosch deposed: I live at 27, Hanbury-street, and am a carpenter. 27 is next door to 29, Hanbury-street. On Saturday, Sept. 8, I got up about a quarter past five in the morning, and went into the yard. It was then about twenty minutes past five, I should think. As I returned towards the back door I heard a voice say "No" just as I was going through the door. It was not in our yard, but I should think it came from the yard of No. 29. I, however, cannot say on which side it came from. I went in-doors, but returned to the yard about three or four minutes afterwards. While coming back I heard a sort of a fall against the fence which divides my yard from that of 29. It seemed as if something touched the fence suddenly.

The Coroner: Did you look to see what it was?—No.

Had you heard any noise while you were at the end of your yard?—No.

Any rustling of clothes?—No. I then went into the house, and from there into the street to go to my work. It was about two minutes after half-past five as I passed Spitalfields Church.

Do you ever hear people in these yards?—Now and then, but not often.

By a Juryman: I informed the police the same night after I returned from my work.

The Foreman: What height are the palings?—About 5ft 6in to 6ft high.

And you had not the curiosity to look over?—No, I had not.

It is not usual to hear thumps against the palings?—They are packing-case makers, and now and then there is a great case goes up against the palings. I was thinking about my work, and not that there was anything the matter, otherwise most likely I would have been curious enough to look over.

The Foreman of the Jury: It's a pity you did not.

By the Coroner.—I did not see any man and woman in the street when I went out.

William Stevens, 35, Dorset-street, stated: I am a painter. I knew the deceased. I last saw her alive at twenty minutes past twelve on the morning of Saturday, Sept. 8. She was in the kitchen. She was not the worse for drink.

Had she got any rings on her fingers?—Yes. Shown a piece of an envelope, witness said he believed it was the same as she picked up near the fireplace. Did not notice a crest, but it was about that size, and it had a red postmark on it. She left the kitchen, and witness thought she was going to bed. Never saw her again. Did not know any one that she was on bad terms with.

This was all the evidence obtainable.

A Juryman: Is there any chance of a reward being offered by the Home Secretary?

The Foreman: There is already a reward of £100 offered by Mr. Samuel Montagu, M.P. There is a committee getting up subscriptions, and they expect to get about £200. The coroner has already said that the Government are not prepared to offer a reward.

A Juror: There is more dignity about a Government reward, and I think one ought to be offered.

The Foreman of the Jury: There are several ideas of rewards, and it is supposed that about £300 will be got up. It will all be done by private individuals.

The Coroner: As far as we know, the case is complete.

The Foreman of the Jury: It seems to be a case of murder against some person or persons unknown.

It was then agreed to adjourn the inquiry until next Wednesday before deciding upon the terms of the verdict.

The police have made no further arrest. The indignation at the East-end owing to the attitude of the Home Office is increasing, and yesterday the Vigilance Committee, of which Mr. Lusk is president, met again at 74, Mile-end-road, for the purpose of receiving the reports of their honorary officers in the matter. From the statements of Mr. Aarons, Mr. B. Harris, Mr. Cohen, and the president himself, there appeared to be some thousands of the better classes at the East-end who believe that a substantial Government reward would bring about the apprehension of the murderer, and the police authorities and the Home Office were condemned for declining to offer the reward.

The secretary said that on the 16th inst. the committee sent a letter to the Home Secretary on the subject, which was to the following effect: "At a meeting of the Committee of Gentlemen held at 74, Mile-end-road, E., it was resolved to approach you upon the subject of the reward we are about to offer for the discovery of the author or authors of the late atrocities in the East-end of London, and to ask you, sir, to augment our fund for the said purpose, or kindly state your reasons for refusing." To this letter he had received the following communication:

"Whitehall, Sept. 17, 1888.

"Sir,—I am directed by the Secretary of State to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th inst. with reference to the question of the offer of a reward for the discovery of the perpetrators of the recent murders in Whitechapel, and I am to inform you that, had the Secretary of State considered the case a proper one for the offer of a reward, he would at once have offered one on behalf of the Government; but that the practice of offering rewards for the discovery of criminals was discontinued some years ago, because experience showed that such offers of reward tended to produce more harm than good, and the Secretary of State is satisfied that there is nothing in the circumstances of the present case to justify a departure from this rule.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"G. LEIGH PEMBERTON.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

NOTES AND ANTICIPATIONS.

In beautiful weather the meeting at Leicester was brought to a conclusion, and attracted many who will finish the week at Manchester. The favourites began well, as Castilian carried off the Maiden Plate, open to all ages, and Mainbeam copied his example in the Mapperley Selling Plate. Castilian reappeared in the Quorn Welter Handicap, for which Purple Emperor started favourite from Sky Pilot. This pair failed to stay in front to the end, and, after an exciting set-to from the middle of the Stand, the verdict was a dead heat between Arundel and Pelham. Their owners at once agreed to a division, and, curiously enough, each had started at the same price. Recent racing at Huntingdon had foreshadowed the victory of Early Morn, bought in for 250 guineas. Mr. Spalding, her owner, subsequently purchased Ilfra, to whose share fell the Glen Plate. The price paid for this filly was 410 guineas. She seems fairly worth the money. The boy who rode the much-fancied colt by Farnese—Lady Gosling in the Midland Nursery could not extend him. His defeat admits, therefore, of extenuating circumstances. The verdict seemed in doubt between Carnival and Heptarchy until the latter swerved, and left the plainest of plain sailing for Mr. Roberts's quick-actioned representative. During the afternoon there was a strong run upon Friar's Balsam for the Lancashire Plate, which had the effect of steadying both Seabreeze and Ayrshire. The opposition of the trio on Saturday will command widespread interest, and Friar's Balsam would hardly be sent did not the chance exist that he might show some return to his two-year-old excellence. A rapid journey landed the Leicester contingent at Manchester before eight o'clock, and, although the cracks engaged in the Lancashire Plate have yet to put in an appearance, plenty of horses have arrived to insure good sport on the opening day. The course is in capital condition, and all things point to a most successful September celebration. My selections for to-morrow are as follows: Stamford Welter Handicap, LINTHORPE; Palatine Welter Plate, GOLDSEEKER; Phillips Selling Plate, TRAPDOOR; Lancaster Nursery, INDIAN PRINCE or ITALICA; Stretford Plate, ERFURT; Thursday Selling Plate, SERENADE; De Trafford Welter Handicap, LADY ROSEBERY or FALLOW CHAT.

Wednesday Night. HOTSPUR.

LONDON BETTING—WEDNESDAY.

Though the clubs were well attended to-day, it cannot be recorded that business was very brisk, though a few changes took place. This was more particularly the case in connection with the Lancashire Plate, for which Friar's Balsam was in great demand, and, opening at his overnight price of 8 to 1, was finally backed down to 5 to 1, and he looks like becoming a warm public favourite. The French colt Le Sancy had a genuine commission executed in his favour, and was backed at 8 to 1 to win £500 at the close of the day's proceedings. Kenilworth and Trayles were firm at the head of the quotations for the Cesarewitch, but Acme was friendless at 10 to 1. Of the middle division Cotillon and Ruddigore were in improved request, while for the Cambridgeshire Minting was in demand, 1000 to 150, 500 to 75, and six "fifties" being taken. Mamia appeared to have a coming appearance, while Cotillon had a trifle invested in his favour, as did Sandal; but both will probably run before the race under notice. Prices:

SOUTH OF ENGLAND v. AUSTRALIA.

This three days' match was concluded at Hastings yesterday. The Southerners completed their second innings in ten minutes, the not-outs of the previous evening being Pigg and H. Phillips, of whom the latter added six to the score, making it 175. The Australians therefore required 59 to win. They commenced batting at 12.12, M'Donnell and Bannerman going to the wickets, to the bowling of Lohmann and Beaumont. M'Donnell, after contributing 4, was caught and bowled. One for 10. Trott then joined Bannerman and the pair brought the score to 39, when Pigg and Smith went on bowling. The necessary runs were, however, obtained at one o'clock, the Australians winning by nine wickets. The festival, which was initiated last year, has been very successful. Upwards of 12,000 persons paid for admission to the ground during the week, and the receipts from all sources amounted to £670. Score:

VIENNA, SEPT. 19.

The "Strossmayer incident" has produced a profound impression in Russia, and, according to my information, it has greatly incensed the Czar. Of course all its consequences had been well weighed prior to its occurrence, and the vexation it might cause the Czar had been taken into account. But great evils require heroic remedies. Bishop Strossmayer's seditious propaganda could have been stopped by nothing short of a formal reproof from his Sovereign. It is pretty certain that the Czar will seize an early opportunity of manifesting his displeasure.

It was also reported to-day that the Russian [illegible], who had been attending the Army manœuvres in the South, has quite unexpectedly [illegible] Poland, and that his Majesty [illegible] the Polish fortresses and [illegible] This news, if confirmed, would [illegible] that the Czar has abandoned his [illegible]. If such be [illegible] the situation must be considerably more strained than is generally supposed.

[illegible] of the "Strossmayer incident" on the general public in Russia may be gathered from the tone of the leading newspapers. The [illegible] says that alarm is beginning to prevail in Government circles in Vienna, which can alone account for the extraordinary incident at Belovar. Bishop Strossmayer was rebuked for proceedings which were no concern of the Austrian Government, but exclusively of the Vatican. The tone of the Austro-Hungarian press is such that Society and the Journals in Russia can no longer be restrained. Patience has a limit.

The Novosti observes that the "Strossmayer incident" merely shows what it costs in Austria to manifest sympathy for Russia. The St. Petersburg Gazette says that the "Strossmayer incident" suggests the query as to what is really the state of relations between Russia and Austria. Were they peaceful and friendly an address of congratulation to Russia could never be regarded in Vienna as a crime.

According to the Russian Courier Lord Salisbury, Prince von Bismarck, and Signor Crispi are highly dissatisfied with the appointment of the monk, Father Paissi, of Mount Athos, to the Presidency of the Russian Colony-Church and School to be founded in Abyssinia; but Russia cares nothing for the anger of these statesmen. An Abyssinian Fund has been provided, and it has been decided to open Abyssinian seminaries at St. Petersburg, Moscow, Kiew, and Odessa on the same model as the Servian Seminary at Moscow.

The Political Correspondence this evening publishes the following:

"In consequence of the incident at Belovar, the Vatican has summoned Bishop Strossmayer to Rome to give explanations concerning the telegram which he sent to the committee of the religious festival at Kieff last month. It will depend upon the nature of these explanations whether the Bishop will be permitted to remain at his post or whether he will be transferred to another sphere of action."

THE GERMAN MANŒUVRES.

(TELEGRAM FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

BERLIN, SEPT. 19.

To-day the Imperial manœuvres came to an end.

The Kaiser, who commanded the Eastern Army—his Guards—in person, defeated the Western Army—the Brandenburg corps—in the neighbourhood between Bollersdorf, Hasenholz, and Ruhlsdorf.

His Majesty proceeded from the battle-field to the military station erected on the Eastern Railway, and inspected the preparations made by the Railway-regiment for entraining the troops. The Kaiser then left for Hubertusstock. His Majesty looked remarkably well to-day, and anything but fatigued after his exertions of the past few days.

Amongst the advancements conferred to-day on officers I may mention that General von Pape, hitherto Commander of the Guards, was advanced on the manœuvre-field to the rank of Colonel-General, with rank of a Field-Marshal, and appointed Commander of the Troops in the Marches—that is, Commander-in-Chief of all the troops in the province of Brandenburg, including those in Berlin. This post of honour was created for Field-Marshal Count von Wrangel, and since his death has not been filled up.

In the place of General von Pape Lieutenant-General Baron von Meerscheidt-Hullessem has been appointed Commander of the Guards. He is looked upon in the army as the most able of the younger Prussian infantry-generals, and has been President of the Commission that prepared the "New Infantry-drill Regulations."

NEWS FROM VIENNA.

(TELEGRAM FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

VIENNA, SEPT. 19.

The Bucharest correspondent of the Wiener Allgemeine Zeitung says that the Prince of Wales is expected to visit the Roumanian capital. His Royal Highness arrived at Keszthely, from Gödöllö, on the evening of the 18th, and was received at the station by Count Tasilo Festetics, whose guest he will be till Friday next.

The Count's Château was splendidly illuminated for the occasion, and the locality of Keszthely has been decorated on quite a lavish scale.

The other guests of Count Festetics are Count Eberhard von Wurtemberg, Count Vilmos Festetics, Count Trauttmansdorff, Baron Albert Rothschild, and the English and Austrian members of the Prince's suite.

A retired Government clerk who had for many years lived the life of a recluse in one of the large barrack-like houses of suburban Vienna, died a few days ago, and in his will he bequeathed a considerable sum of money to one of his neighbours in the subjoined terms:

"Up the second-flight of stairs there lives at door No. 63 a widow who has two daughters. I leave a sum of 40,000fl. to the one who always nodded in such a friendly way when she met me."

At first there was great rejoicing in the widow's home, but presently the two sisters fell out as to which of them the old gentleman had left the money. Both of them had nodded when they met him, and both claimed the legacy. Legal proceedings are impending, but the solicitors on either side are said to be inclined for a compromise by dividing the money in equal shares between the two sisters.

FRANCO-GERMAN FRONTIER INCIDENT.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAMS.)

DELLE, SEPT. 19.

The body of a German gendarme, with a bullet hole through the throat, was found yesterday at Suarce, in French territory.

An inquiry into the circumstances was immediately instituted. The belief at present is that the man committed suicide.

DELLE, SEPT. 19 (EVENING).

From further particulars it appears that the body of the German gendarme was found in a thicket, on French territory, thirty metres from the frontier.

The latest theory regarding the manner in which the deceased met his death is that he may have been shot by German smugglers, who afterwards removed the body to French territory in order to escape suspicion.

DELLE, SEPT. 19 (10.0 P.M.)

The inquiry into the cause of the death of the German gendarme has resulted in showing that the man committed suicide.

The excitement caused by the occurrence has now subsided.

RELEASE OF SALVATIONISTS.—Yesterday morning three members of the Salvation Army, Captain James Smith, Cadet Rawlings, and Private William Lawrence, who have been imprisoned in Holloway Gaol in connection with charges of obstruction at Ware, were released from prison. They were met at the gaol gates by two or three hundred of their comrades, and by nine other Salvationists previously discharged from the same prison, and the whole body marched in procession to the Chalk Farm "Barracks." Here the released prisoners, who wore an imitation convict dress, freely ornamented with black arrows, were entertained to a breakfast of tea, bread and butter, and watercress. In the meantime, a meeting was held under the presidency of Commissioner Railton, who denied that the Salvation Army desired to set the law at defiance. They wished to keep strictly within the law, and the meetings which they had held at Ware, in places where there was very little traffic, could not by any means amount to obstruction. Subsequently the discharged prisoners, including a lad of seventeen, appeared on the platform, and Commissioner Railton welcomed them from prison in the name of the "General." Captain James Smith described his prison experiences, amid cries of "Hallelujah" and "Praise the Lord." Alluding to the conduct of the authorities at Ware, he complained that they would not allow the Salvation Army to stand anywhere, and that he himself was "run in" by the police three times in one week. In the end the magistrates had inflicted upon him and his brother cadets fines amounting to between £30 and £40, which they were quite unable to pay, but they preferred to go to prison. He and his fellow cadets were ready to go to gaol again if necessary, for they were determined to continue their good work at Ware, as a result of which several persons now in that hall had been saved. One or two other cadets followed, complaining that one of the warders at Holloway Gaol was a desperate bully, but that otherwise they were considerately treated. A collection was made, and a Church of England clergyman who was present offered prayer for those who, he said, had not feared to go to prison for a righteous cause.

MODERN PULPIT ORATORY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

SIR—Your correspondents of yesterday seemed to have sailed away from the central idea of the interesting discussion, viz., the decay of powerful pulpit oratory. The "Churchmen" who declaim against Nonconformist chapel government, and set up the theory of "close parish contact" as an excuse for the unconvincing, essay-like character of their dull and dogmatic Sunday discourses, not even as vigorous as the ancient "homilies," who assert that men of talent "will not enter into pastoral duties on behalf of Nonconformist government," forget that the Nonconformists attach more importance to powerful and impressive speaking, to the grand convincing power of inspired oratory, and trained and skilled practice in the manner and method of appealing to a congregation, than do any other forms of the Christian religion. Unlike the Church of England, the Nonconformists require evidence of religious fervour and conviction, but also of the power of speech. Take, for example, the course of instruction prescribed and adopted by the authorities of that old Baptist institution whose chief seat is now in Regent's Park, and which is one of the Baptist colleges affiliated to the University of London. Here, during a five years' course of instruction, secular and theological teachings are blended. The three classes of students who attend it consist of (1) those who study theology only; (2) those who intend to study theology and take in the first instance a course of preliminary education; and (3) lay students. Now, to Nonconformists, if a man can't preach he is no use at all. He may be a learned theologian, skilled in subtleties of dialectic, and an adroit casuist; but if he cannot "fire out" what he wants to say with instinctive sincerity and conviction he is of no use to this body, and had better be a country curate, or the editor of a controversial religious journal. The students here are often recommended by ministers who have heard them speak, and can judge of their power and their conviction; and that full and thorough importance is attached to this power, which in a sense may well be called the gift of tongues, is shown by the rules for its guidance and cultivation. The students are required to write a sermon on a given text, and read it aloud to their tutors and fellow-students. They are sent on Sundays to "stations" in the country, where they practise preaching, and if a student succeeds in attracting and holding a congregation his merits are soon recognised by intelligent laymen at the said "station," who do not fail to let the authorities know of his success. Sermons are written by the students in class, and criticised by their tutors and their fellow-students, and on alternate weeks there are "exercises" in extemporaneous speaking, for which awards are given. The college possesses a debating society, in which secular topics are discussed and a public debate takes place annually. There is a special and highly-valued prize for public extemporaneous speaking. Two sermons in each session are expected from each theological student, and, what is to my mind, as a layman of another denomination and wholly unbiassed towards the Baptist form of conviction of the Truth, the fine and beautiful art of practical elocution is not ignored. Lectures on elocution are given at stated intervals by recognised authorities on the subject—the late Sheridan Knowles being among the many teachers who have at one time or another helped the young students to give the best expression to their noble thoughts; and not only are the pupils taught in class, when each man may profit by the instruction given to his neighbour, but the teacher of the art of oratory will see each man alone, and give him private drill and counsel, even as elocutionists give advice and instruction to our great stage artists. Compare the power and energy of an earnest young Baptist preacher with the too often monotonous and academic "sing-song" intoning of your "Established" curate, and the advantages and the wisdom of the Baptist method—that recognises so justly the wondrous power of the human voice, fearlessness in attack or support of an argument, and convincing earnestness in passionate propagandism, as contrasted with the dull uniformity of ritual, and monotony of delivery that is too often the drowsy characteristic of conformity—will be at once apparent. The deathless power of oratory holds its own in the Senate and in our law courts, and surely it is a gift to be recognised and valued in the most sacred of all missions. I think, Sir, we of the Established Church are too much inclined to substitute argument and dogma for direct pleading and that broad humanitarianism which characterise our brothers outside our pale. I think, moreover, that, when it is argued that Anglican ministers keep in close contact with their parishioners, that it should not be forgotten that Nonconformists have no "parishioners" in our sense, but that they are a united body, with really more uniting spirit in them than hereditary Churchmen have. At all events, they recognise the power of speech to a greater degree than do the soi-disant "orthodox," and we might do worse than borrow a lesson from their instructive book, that some way still seems to be edited by the spirit of John Bunyan. No doubt "all will come right by and by," as says your correspondent, "An English Churchman"; but it becomes his Church and mine to "speak up" if her voice is to be heard, and her lessons attended to.—I am, Sir, faithfully yours,

London, Sept. 19. SINCERITY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

SIR—Your admirable commentary of yesterday on Dr. Joseph Parker's text of the previous day should set earnest Christian men to work out a remedy for the too common evil results of bread and meat retailed from pulpits too often stale and putrid.

"Like priest like people" is a proverb verified still, both in good and evil results. A preacher who can hold his own is never overridden by Mr. Deacon or Mrs. Deacon. The minister who cannot lift the deacon to his own level is sure to be brought down to that of the deacon. And this applies to the whole membership.

Your "English Churchman" correspondent is very discreet, in his own opinion, but he does not discover a worse evil than the "Deacon" in Nonconformity and "Church" alike—the evil of looking more to oratory than to the orator who can leave his platform or pulpit and come down into the everyday life of his flock and people, and reduce his doctrines and fancies and old truths in new forms to the everyday workaday practices of life—righteous life.

Distinctions there may be 'twixt sects in outward form, but it is hard to detect this out of the pulpit, out of the church or chapel, and where it should be—in the shop and factory.—I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

ALEX. D. DAVIDSON.

1, Lanhill-road, W., Sept. 19.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

SIR—In a Nonconformist congregation it must be exceedingly difficult for both minister and hearers to be satisfied for a long period, and few preachers can preach for a long term to the same people the same "old, old story" without some amount of weariness. For forty years, or more, I have on an average heard two sermons a week, chiefly in Nonconformist places of worship, and begin to think that preaching is made too much of. One may be in perfect accord with a preacher, and fully sympathise with him, but be scarcely an "attentive hearer" at all times. With both the Established and the non-Established Churches more attention is being paid than formerly to the service, the praise portion especially being more highly appreciated. The lofty spirituality of the Friends and others who sustained a high Christian tone without the aid of singing or anything scenic has been superseded by emotional music in all directions, and long sermons are nowhere tolerated. If the preachers turned out at ten o'clock on a Saturday night they might find material for a sermon.

The Methodists, the Salvationists, the High Church, and the Nonconformists too, are all looking to the power of emotional music, whatever they may think of a sermon.—Yours, &c.,

GEORGE LOOSLEY.

Berkhampstead, Sept. 18.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

SIR—I have carefully read Dr. Parker's letter, as well as that of Mr. Hastings and your leader of to-day, and am bound to confess that I have been more helped by the newspaper article than by the letters of these learned divines. Unquestionably, as you clearly point out in your leader, the preacher should in mode of address adapt himself to the circumstances and capacities of his hearers. In this way the Apostle Paul became "all things to all men, that he might by all means save some." As recently as Sunday last I heard of a succession of preachers who, in a district near London largely inhabited by labouring people, were described by them as "foreigners," because they spoke in a language intelligible enough to most, but to them an unknown tongue. Preachers often forget that wisdom lies in making a difficult thing plain, rather than in rendering a plain matter difficult.

But the important question, after all, is, What should be the Christian preacher's theme? This primary question absorbs the secondary one of style and form. Let us go back to apostolic times.—Yours faithfully,

Tufnell Park, N., Sept. 18. E. S.

SHIPBUILDING STRIKE.—The strike in the Belfast shipbuilding trade ended last evening, arrangements being made for re-opening Messrs. Harland and Wolff's works at the usual hour on Friday morning. The terms of settlement are these: The employers grant an advance of 1s 6d per week to rivetters throughout the works and to platers employed in the shipyard; and 1s per week to platers working in the boilermakers' shop. The men, on their part, concede piece-work prices to the firm at the same rates as are paid in other parts and in the other yards in Belfast. This undertaking by the men will considerably facilitate the execution of work in the yard.

ASSAULT IN PICCADILLY.—Some alarm was occasioned yesterday in the West-end by the report that a woman had been stabbed between two and three o'clock that morning in Piccadilly, and had been removed to St. George's Hospital in a dangerous condition. Upon investigation the name of the woman in question was given as Adelaide Rutter, of 21, Stangate-street, Westminster Bridge-road. She had, it appeared, been in the company of an unknown man, described as a groom, tall and dark, and in Down-street they had had an altercation concerning money, during which the man struck her on the right cheek, it is supposed, with a stick, inflicting a contused wound which bled somewhat. The man made off, and the woman obtained the assistance of a police-constable, who took her in a hansom cab to the hospital at Hyde Park-corner.

LIBERAL-UNIONIST CONFERENCE.

A conference of delegates, representing the leading Liberal-Unionist Associations in Yorkshire and the North of England, was held at the Technical College, Bradford, yesterday afternoon. Mr. Powell Williams, M.P., presided, and among those present were several members of Parliament. Lord Hartington sent the following letter:

"I have seen with much satisfaction the account of the extensive preparations which have been made for the conference of the National Radical Union in Bradford, to be held on the 19th inst. Everything which has occurred since the rejection of the Home Rule measures, both in Ireland and in Parliament, has in my opinion tended to confirm the soundness of the judgment which has inspired the action of Liberal Unionists in maintaining firmly the alliance of the two sections of the Unionist party. In Ireland the policy of our opponents has more and more shown itself to be based on principles of disorder and lawlessness, which seem to be meeting with increased acquiescence on the part of their English allies, while the events of the present session have proved that the Unionist alliance is capable of providing the country with a legislative policy of a distinctly popular and practical character. So long as the Unionist party continues to do its duty in the repression of crime and disorder on the one hand, while on the other it seeks to satisfy the just expectations and legislative requirements of the people, I have no doubt that it will be fully capable of resisting the attacks of its enemies, whether in Great Britain or in Ireland; but I rejoice none the less to see that the necessary measures are being taken to improve its organisation and political efficiency."

Lord Derby wrote, regretting his inability to be present, and in reference to Irish affairs said the question at the present moment seemed to be whether men who publicly encouraged and incited others to resist the law and to attack the police were to be allowed to do so with impunity, and were to be regarded as martyrs if their offence brought its legal punishment. The idea of Home Rulers seemed to be, first, that to call an offence political was equivalent to saying that it was no offence at all; and, next, that to plunder one's neighbour was a legitimate, or at least an excusable act, if it was done with a view to promote the interests of a disaffected party. These were not doctrines likely to be accepted in England. Supposing the Home Rule party to have their own way, how would they deal with these questions of eviction? Would they contend that all evictions were unjustifiable, and that a tenant had a right to live as long as he wished in the house which belonged to another without paying rent for it? If they would it might be judged how far prosperity of any kind could be safe in their hands? If they would not what could they do except what the present Irish authorities were doing? The existing land law of Ireland was more favourable to the tenant than any other which existed in the world, and to complain of its being in force was to say in fact that the payment or non-payment of rent should be left to the option of the person who had to pay it. Adopt that principle where the land was concerned, and it would soon be extended to all other departments. The one ready remedial measure which was in their power was to continue the wise policy of encouraging Irish occupiers to become owners of their farms. Among those who had done so the Nationalist agitation found little support. They felt that they had nothing to gain by political change, and the language of its promoters was well calculated to bring home to them the fact that they might have something to lose.

A daughter of Mr. John Bright wrote that her father was not yet able to resume his correspondence. Several other letters of apology were read.

The CHAIRMAN went on to say the Unionist party still stood out for the supremacy of the law and the unity of the Empire, and they still saw a broad distinction between Parnellism and patriotism. The power of the National League in Ireland was doubtless waning; its home funds were far less now than formerly; the Roman Catholic clergy, yielding to the Papal Rescript, were absenting themselves from the meetings; and the disclosure of the real demands of Mr. Davitt and those who were associated with him had disquieted and shaken many minds.

Mr. W. S. ALLEN moved the first resolution: "That this meeting gratefully acknowledges the patriotic and unselfish action of the Liberal Unionists in the House of Commons, which enabled her Majesty's Government to maintain the integrity of the Empire and the supremacy of Parliament, to make satisfactory progress in the restoration of law and order in Ireland, and to pass important and valuable laws for the good of the United Kingdom, and trusts that the full success of these measures may pave the way for further legislation."

Mr. T. RICHARDSON seconded the motion, which was supported by Mr. Jesse Collings, M.P., Mr. J. Heywood, and Mr. F. Monks, and carried unanimously.

Mr. CAINE, M.P., moved: "That whilst the arduous task which the Liberal Unionist leaders in the House of Commons have so patriotically undertaken must continue until the reign of order shall have been permanently restored, they will more than ever have to rely upon the loyal and unsparing support of the constituencies. That to secure this support this meeting recommends—(1) That numerous meetings be held in every constituency during next winter; (2) That the delegates on their return home take immediate measures to strengthen existing and organise new Liberal Unionist associations in every polling division of their district; (3) That every such organisation be perfectly efficient to look after the registration of voters and ready to conduct a general or bye election on the shortest notice; (4) that the delegates cannot too strongly urge the necessity for Liberal Unionists to sink all minor differences of opinion among themselves, and to defer questions not of immediate urgency until the conspiracy aiming at the dismemberment of the Empire shall have totally collapsed; that, in order to further such complete union, the executive of the National Radical Union should be requested to consider the propriety of adopting the general title of National Liberal Union, in order that it may more comprehensively represent all sections of the Liberal party who have remained faithful to the principles by which the whole of its members were actuated until the introduction of Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule Bill; that, in view of the national importance of the issue and of the concessions made to Liberal opinion by the present Government, the local organisations of the Conservative and Liberal Unionist parties should agree to postpone differences, and should endeavour to secure the most cordial and harmonious co-operation; and that with this view free interchange of communication should be established between the two organisations, and arrangements made in advance in reference to all contested elections and other matters of common interest."

The resolution was seconded by Mr. Herbert Chamberlain, supported by Mr. Kenrick, M.P., and others, and adopted nem. con.

A vote of thanks to the chairman closed the proceedings.

In the evening a crowded meeting was held in St. George's Hall. There were present about 4,000 people, most of whom had been admitted by ticket. The gallery was, however, free to the public, and advantage was taken of the opportunity of admission by a large number of Gladstonians, who prior to the commencement of the meeting made their presence known by loud cheers for the "Grand Old Man," and by subsequent interruption at various stages of the meeting. The chair was occupied by Mr. T. A. Watson, chairman of the Bradford Liberal Unionist Association, and there were present, besides the Right Hon. J. Chamberlain, several members of Parliament.

The Chairman having opened the proceedings,

Mr. WALTER MORRISON moved a resolution welcoming the right hon. gentleman, and expressing cordial approval of the policy pursued by the leaders of the Liberal Unionist party.

The resolution was seconded by Mr. TOM MITCHELL, and supported by Mr. W. P. SINCLAIR, M.P., and carried, a large number of hands being held up against it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, who was received with loud and prolonged cheers and hooting, said: I thank you—(disorder, and loud cheers for Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Morley)—very much on behalf of my colleagues and myself for the resolution which you have just passed by such an overwhelming majority. (Cheers.) In these times, which are times of great anxiety, we are more than gratified, we are encouraged by the assurance of your support and sympathy. On the last occasion upon which I had the honour of addressing a Bradford audience, I had to lament the serious illness of your late member, Mr. Forster—(loud cheers)—who had recently been struck down in the middle of his career. Unfortunately, that illness had a fatal termination a few months later, and Mr. Forster was called home to join the great majority, and his place knows him no more. Upon several questions of great importance I differed from Mr. Forster—(hear, hear)—and opposed his policy; but in the course of those differences and the controversies which ensued I had plenty of reason to appreciate the courage and the persistence and the resolution of the man, and the true honesty of purpose which dictated his work—(hear, hear)—and which we like to think is characteristic of Englishmen. (Cheers.) You know that recently the life of Mr. Forster has been published, and I daresay many of you have read it, as I have, with interest and pleasure; but the portion of that life which has interested me most is the part in which those of his relatives and friends who knew him best and loved him most gave an account—(disorder)—of the last weeks, the last months, of his life, because then, all minor considerations having sunk out of sight in the shadow of the great impending change, the true man was seen. We are able to appreciate the tenderness that was behind a rugged exterior, and the devotion and the patriotism which perhaps a certain reserve and shyness may have concealed before from his ordinary associates. But I notice that in all this time the one thought which was prevailing in Mr. Forster's mind, and was his supreme consolation, was expressed by him when he said, "I have tried to serve my country." (Hear, hear.) What better epitaph can any English statesman have than that? (Hear, hear.) What greater claim to the grateful recollection of his fellow countrymen? Since Mr. Forster's death there has been a great crisis in our political history which he was not spared fully to appreciate, and the imminence of which I had not the slightest conception at the time I last stood on this platform. Then I was speaking as an advanced, but very loyal, member of the Liberal party—(cheers)—and I was endeavouring to promote the success of that party at the impending general election, and to pave the way for the reforms to which I believed it would immediately devote its attention. Alas for the vanity of human expectation! (Laughter.) In four months from that time the Liberal party was divided from top to bottom. The reforms which we were advocating had been put on the shelf; the "Authorised Programme" had gone with the "Unauthorised Programme," to keep it company—(laughter)—and we were plunged in a constitutional discussion, in which we are still engaged down to this time. My object to-night will be to state to you as clearly as I can the issues upon which this controversy has to be waged. There has been a change which has made it possible that I, who have been a Radical all my life, and who have not changed any one of the opinions—(cheers)—which I have ever expressed, should support heartily and cordially a Government every member of which, with one exception, is a Conservative; and a change which has also made it possible for the bulk of the Liberal party to transform themselves into the allies of Mr. Parnell—(hear, hear)—to be hand-and-glove with the men whom three years ago they denounced from every platform—(cheers)—as the enemies of this country, and whose policy and methods they repudiated with scorn and with indignation. That is the duty which I set myself, and it is more necessary that some one should put the issue before the country because our opponents seem carefully to avoid it. (Hear, hear.) You won't find any clear statement of the policy which these gentlemen profess or of the differences which separate them from us. Why is that? The reason is not far to seek. They don't tell you what their policy is because they don't know themselves. (Loud laughter and cheers.) They are not Liberals. ("They are," "No," and cheers.) Liberals have a policy and a flag. (Renewed cheers.) These men have only a leader, and they don't know and they don't care into what ditch he is going to lead them. Their leader has deliberately chosen to enshroud his proceedings in mystery; he has refused to trust the people; he refused to take the nation into his confidence, and accordingly his followers have to cover their ignorance of his intentions by vague declamations and generalities. ("Bosh!" and "What is your policy?") We differ from our Gladstonian friends because we hold that the law of the land ought to be maintained—(hear, hear)—even although it involves the payment of rent, and we differ from them because we are not prepared to accept at the hands of Mr. Parnell a scheme of self-government for the Irish people. (Hear, hear.) The proposals which the Gladstonians are supporting amount in the first place to an agrarian revolution, which would lead to the confiscation of all property in land; and it amounts in the second place to a political revolution, which would end in a separation between Ireland and Great Britain. (Cheers.) We, as Liberal-Unionists, and in close alliance with the Conservative-Unionists—(loud cheers)—refuse absolutely to surrender to the party of violence and disorder. (Renewed cheers.) We defeated the Home Rule Bill and Mr. Gladstone, because we saw that that bill would place in the absolute discretion of this party the lives and the property of the loyal minority of the people of Ireland—(cheers)—and because we saw also that this party would be enabled, whenever the interests of their agitation demanded, or their political animosities prompted, in the words of their own leader, to "sever the last link which binds Ireland to Great Britain." (Cheers.) Nothing has occurred since to impair the force of our objections. Mr. Gladstone has given no assurance that he would give any guarantee or security which was wanting in the bill which we defeated, and as long as that is the case we shall continue to oppose his return to power. (Cheers.) It was for rejecting this scheme, which every Gladstonian now admits to have been a mistake and an impossibility, that you abuse us as traitors—("No, no," and cheers)—to the Liberal cause. Why, we are your saviours. (Cheers.) You Gladstonians were following like the blind following a blind leader; you were following on a road which you admit to have been the wrong one—("No," and cheers)—and we brought you back to common sense and sound morality. It appears to me that it is impossible for any reasonable or intelligent man to refuse to us at least the right to keep our opinions in suspense until Mr. Gladstone has consented to lay his new scheme before the people, in order that we may be quite sure that it has not the same defects as that which we so successfully pointed out in the old one. (Hear, hear.) Until he does so, until he takes you into his confidence, I hope that my fellow-countrymen will refuse to be misled by vague generalities and high-sounding phrases that mean nothing, and which may lead them altogether astray. (Hear, hear, and cheers.) We are promised if we will put Mr. Gladstone back into office that there will be a final settlement of the Irish question, and that there will be a "union of hearts." (Cheers.) I want you to examine that phrase carefully. ("What is your policy?") If the Home Rule Bill of Mr. Gladstone had passed it is perfectly certain that the great majority of the people of Ulster would have refused to have any part in the election of a Dublin Parliament—(hear, hear)—and would have resisted any attempt by that body to control their action and to tax them. That is a fact. (Interruption.) What I want to ask the Gladstonians is, How did they propose to deal with this state of things? Suppose the population of Ulster—the most loyal population in Ireland—(cheers and "No")—the most industrious—(cheers)—the most energetic, the people who have done more for Ireland than all the agitators put together, the men who have created her great industries and who have extended her commerce—had resisted the establishment of an Irish Parliament. Would these men, who deplore coercion, have sent an army to coerce the loyal people of Ulster, and to force them against their will to transfer their allegiance from the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland to Mr. Parnell, and from the Imperial Parliament at Westminster to the National League at Dublin? But that is not the only problem with which they would have had to deal. Suppose these gentlemen had pacified Ulster, not by the mild coercion which is adopted by the present Government. (Loud and prolonged cheers and hooting.) It would take a good deal more than two or three months of imprisonment of a few of their leaders in order to put down the people of Ulster. But when they had pacified Ulster by a military occupation, and when a Dublin Parliament ruled supreme over the destinies of the whole of Ireland, then supposing differences arose between this Parliament and the Parliament of Westminster, how are they to be met? Suppose this Parliament at Dublin were to refuse to pay the contribution which was exacted from it, and were to declare that Ireland, being a poor country, was unable to pay its fair share of the debt or its contribution towards naval or military expenditure, would they, in that case, send an army in order to destroy the Parliament they had created? And supposing again, this country were once more involved in a war for its very existence, as it was at the beginning of the century. Are you certain the men who, a short time ago were praying in public for the success of the Zulus, who were praying for a Russian war, would bear their fair share of the sacrifices which would be entailed in such an emergency as that? Are you sure the "union of hearts" would endure such a strain? Yet it is a risk of this kind you are asked to run—a risk which involves the very existence of the nation, the loss of its gigantic commerce, and the ruin and disaster which would follow its loss. Let us come to the second point, the agrarian question, which I have said divides us from our present opponents. They say that coercion is not to be tolerated. They denounce us because we support coercion. What do they mean by coercion? (Cheers, and a Voice: "What do you mean?") What do I mean? I will tell you what I mean, and I am here to denounce it as strongly as any man. I mean the coercion of the weak and the oppressed. I mean the shooting of old men—(cheers)—and young women on their own hearth-stones. (Cheers.) I mean mutilation and outrage, and violence of all kinds, established by the decrees of a secret tribunal and inflicted upon persons who cannot defend themselves. (Cheers.) I mean the coercion of the midnight assassin and the Moonlighter. I mean the coercion which brings oppression to those who refuse to obey the decrees of this illegal tribunal. I mean the coercion which denies the rites of burial to the dead, and the rites of religion to the living. That is the coercion which I denounce. That is not the coercion which is denounced by the Gladstonians. (Interruption.) I appeal to the vast majority in this hall, and I ask you to note the interruptions. I want you to know what separates us from the Gladstonians. It is the same thing which separates you—the majority in this hall—from the minority which jeers and laughs when we talk of the murder of old men and women in Ireland. The coercion which the Gladstonians denounce is the coercion of the law. (A Voice: "Mitchelstown," and cries of "Mandeville.") All law is coercive, and the one thing which distinguishes a civilised state from barbarism is the fact that in a civilised state the law of the land is observed—(cheers)—and the people who disobey the law are punished. (Hear.) In Ireland at the present time coercion means only what it means in England and Scotland—("No, no," and "Yes")—that men must obey the law. At the present moment in Ireland there is greater liberty and licence of the press than there is in any other country in Europe. (Hooting.) I would ask him who interrupts me whether he knows what coercion is in Ireland at the present time. I will wager ten to one that there is not a single one of the men who have been hooting—(a Voice: "Twenty-three members in prison")—and shouting in this hall to-night who has ever read the Coercion Act. (Hear.) This coercion consists in securing the trial of certain offences before magistrates instead of before a jury. I defy any Gladstonian to point to one single case of any man who has been imprisoned under this Act who by the slightest possibility can be supposed to have been innocent of the offence with which he was charged. (Cheers.) Every man who has been sent to prison has undoubtedly committed the offence with which he was charged and has broken the law in the way in which it was said he had broken it. (Cries of "No.") Mr. Dillon was put in prison for inciting the tenants not to pay their rents, and for urging them to join the Plan of Campaign. Well, the Plan of Campaign has been declared to be illegal by the highest court in Ireland. It has been disapproved by Mr. Parnell himself. It has been condemned on the grounds of religion and morality by the Church of Rome. (Cheers.) Mr. Dillon is above all these things. He persisted in advocating this plan, and he boasted again and again that he would defy the law. He went to Ireland in order to disobey the law. He deliberately broke the law—(a Voice: "Which law?")—and he suffered his punishment accordingly. Mr. Dillon positively invited his arrest, and I don't think that any Government could have existed for a day which in face of such provocation did not put the law in force. (Cheers.) It may be said that the law is unjust. Yes; but if so, bear in mind that your complaint is not against coercion, but against the law, which coercion is intended to enforce. As long as there is a law it must be put into effect. If a law is wrong, by all means let us join hands and try to alter it; but so long as it is the law of the land, we are bound to obey it. If we don't, we must suffer the penalty. (Hear, hear.) Even if the law were unjust, that is no reason whatever for conceding Mr. Parnell's demand for Home Rule, because there is nobody in the world who is more capable or more willing to redress proved injustice than the House of Commons, the representative assembly of Great Britain and Ireland, the assembly which represents the democracy of the three kingdoms. Having described the effect of recent land legislation, which had been to place the tenants of Ireland in a more advantageous position than the tenants of any other country in the world, the right hon. gentleman proceeded: I ask you as honest men, is it possible under such circumstances, and with this legislation, that the evictions which are going on in Ireland can be unfair and unjust evictions? (Cries of "No.") They might have been in 1863, when Mr. Shaw-Lefevre entered Parliament; they might have been in 1869, before Mr. Gladstone commenced his last legislation; it was possible that they might have been in 1887, with the fall in prices and before the Conservative Government brought in their last bill. But, after 1887, I say it is impossible that there could be unfair and unjust evictions in Ireland, and I say that, at the present time, the position of the Irish tenant is far better than that of any tenant in any part of the world. (Cheers.) Compare it with your own condition. I suppose there are thousands and tens of thousands of workmen in Bradford, as there are in Birmingham, who rent a house from a landlord. If you make any improvements, if you enlarge your house, if you paper your rooms, if you put in a grate, everything goes to the landlord. It is not your property, it is his. (Cheers.) If you think your rent is excessive you have no appeal. You cannot go to a court to get a fair rent fixed; you must pay the rent demanded or turn out and let some one else go in. (Cheers.) Yes, and you know that in the large towns in England, and especially in London—aye, and in the large towns of America—there are every week more evictions tenfold than take place in Ireland in a year. (Cheers.) And yet there is no Shaw-Lefevre to raise his eloquent voice against "the tyranny which is worse than that of King Bomba of Naples." (Laughter and cheers.) What is the reason for this persistent agitation in Ireland? I do not believe there would be any evictions to-day if it were not for the pressure put upon the tenants by the National League. (Cheers.) The dramatic scenes which are got up for English readers would not have taken place but for the efforts of a body of Irishmen whose avowed object it has been throughout the whole of those proceedings to make the government of Ireland impossible, and they would not have taken place but for the sympathy of a body of Englishmen who have been content, in order to purchase eighty-six Irish votes in Parliament—(cheers)—to surrender all the principles upon which society rests, and by which the welfare and the security of all classes—of the poorest as well as of the richest—are secured. To this surrender we, the Liberal Unionists, will not lend ourselves. (Cheers.) We see in it only anarchy and confusion and disaster, to all concerned—(hear, hear)—and while we are willing, according to the best traditions of English Liberalism, to seek out and redress all proved grievances, we will not be deceived by hypocritical pretences, nor will we be frightened by threats of violence and outrage into the abandonment of what is our plain duty—to protect the minority in the enjoyment of their rights, to maintain the liberty of every subject of the Queen, to speak and do the thing he will within the confines of the law, and to preserve intact the faith, the honour, and the integrity of our country. (Loud and continued cheers, during which the right hon. gentleman resumed his seat, having spoken an hour and eighteen minutes.)

A vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the proceedings.

A NEW BOROUGH.

In the early part of last year the Prince of Wales sent a circular letter to the principal authorities in the English boroughs soliciting co-operation in his effort to establish, in commemoration of the Queen's Jubilee, an Imperial Institute. The appeal went, as a matter of course, to the ancient town of Chelmsford, in Essex, but it turned out that there was no mayor or recognised "head" of the place who could legitimately take action upon it. This and other circumstances led to a good deal of local criticism, and aroused a desire among an influential section of the inhabitants to be placed on the same footing as neighbouring towns, which enjoyed all the benefits of the Municipal Corporations Act. As a consequence, an agitation was set on foot to secure a charter of incorporation. There was considerable opposition, inspired mainly, it is said, by members of the local board, which since 1850 had dominated the district; but in the end, and after an exhaustive Government inquiry, the reformers gained their point. The Queen in Council granted a charter of incorporation, and the desiderated parchment, destined probably to become historical, was yesterday handed over at the Privy Council Office in Whitehall to the acting town clerk, Mr. A. J. Furbank, who conveyed it by one of the express trains comprised in the admirable service of the Great Eastern Railway to Chelmsford. There was an influential assemblage at that station to greet Mr. Furbank and the charter, and a procession was formed, which marched through the principal thoroughfares of the district, amidst the applause of thousands of spectators, many of whom were excursionists from the other incorporated towns of the county. The streets and houses were tastefully decorated, and the afternoon was observed as a general holiday. The cortège was composed of mounted police, the Essex troop of the Loyal Suffolk Hussars, a local volunteer band, the pupils of all the Chelmsford public schools, the boys and band of the Essex Industrial School, the local friendly societies, the town and county fire brigades, the Mayors and officers of the Corporations of Colchester, Harwich, Maldon, Saffron Walden, and West Ham, the members of the Incorporation Committee, and other functionaries, including Mr. Beadel, the Conservative member of Parliament for the Mid or Chelmsford Division of Essex. On arriving at the Corn Exchange the procession broke up, and the leading people were marshalled on a hustings which had been erected for the occasion. In the presence of an immense crowd the provisional Mayor (Mr. F. Whitmore) delivered a brief and pertinent address, explaining the circumstances which had led to the incorporation of the borough, and pointing out the feebleness of the force—which was as about one to five—which the opponents of the movement had been able to gather against it. The acting town clerk, who met with a cordial reception that indicated widespread appreciation of his merits, read aloud the text of the charter, and the assembled multitude, few of whom could possibly have heard the words, applauded with all the vigour of citizens conscious of having attained a new measure of municipal freedom, and happily unconscious, as a member of the moribund local board remarked to our representative, "of the price they'll have to pay for it." There was a public dinner in the evening at the Corn Exchange, the provisional Mayor presiding. The town was illuminated at night by the electric light, and for hours the air was full of the sounds of bands playing and church bells ringing.

THE REGISTRATIONS.

The revision of the lists for the Strand Borough was yesterday brought to a close. The revising barrister decided that the claim made by Mr. Cremer, M.P., for the office of the International Arbitration Society in Bedford-street was bad, and must be disallowed. In the complimentary observations at the close of the revision, Mr. Irwin alluded to the practice pursued by Mr. Wallace in the Finsbury Court of allowing claims for any time in July, when the Act specifically fixed July 15 as the date when the qualifying year commenced and ended.

In the course of the Finsbury revision Mr. Wallace said that in dealing with questions as to the qualifying year he should allow any claims where the occupation began in July, without any particular reference to the 15th day of that month. Also, in the matter of the seven-mile radius, he should not disfranchise a man who lived, say, half-a-mile beyond that distance.

Mr. Arbuthnot yesterday commenced the revision of the Lambeth lists at the Vestry Hall, Kennington. The question of incorrect returns made by landlords who compounded for the payment of the rates for tenement houses or small houses, let at weekly rentals arose, and the Assistant-Overseer said that the difficulty would be met in the future by terminating the present arrangement of allowing the landlords to "farm" the rates. The claim of a man who only occupied a workshop under the value of £10 was disallowed so far as the Parliamentary franchise was concerned, but allowed for the purposes of the County Council elections. The Archbishop of Canterbury's claim as a county elector on No. 3 list (women and peers) was allowed, his Grace's qualification being Lambeth Palace.

A long discussion arose at the Tower Hamlets Court as to whether an overseer's objection to a claimant, on the ground that he was not the rateable tenant, was valid, no notice of objection having been served upon him.—The revising barrister said that, strictly speaking, all claims ought to be proved, and he was bound to act upon reliable information he received. In case of a voter already on the list notice of objection was necessary before the name could be removed. The learned gentleman refused to grant a case on the point.

At Southwark, Mr. Ribton ruled that if the overseers placed a man who was properly qualified on No. 1 list (Parliamentary and County franchise), the name must remain even where the person so entitled had only claimed for the Parliamentary franchise (No. 2 list).

Mr. Lennox Irwin, the Conservative agent for the Strand Borough, announces that the Conservatives have succeeded in that borough in proving 417 lodger claims and 145 house claims, and in sustaining 525 objections; and that the Liberals have succeeded in proving 378 lodger claims and 153 house claims, but that they have failed to sustain a single objection. The Conservatives have, therefore, succeeded in 1,087 cases and the Liberals in 531, the Conservative net gain being 556.

The retirement of Count Tolstoi, Russian Minister of the Interior, owing to failing health, is expected to take place before very long, and the question of the selection of a successor to the post, which will, in that case, become vacant, is being much discussed in quarters connected with the administration. It is believed that the choice will lie between M. Ostrowsky, who now holds the office of Minister of State Domains, and M. Manasseine, Minister of Justice.

BRITISH TOURISTS IN ANTWERP.—A Central News telegram states: "On Sunday evening a party of tourists were returning to their hotel in Rue de la Musette, when their conduct excited the interference of the police, who attempted to arrest one of their number. A free fight ensued, and three of the police were rendered hors de combat, while one of the party was much bruised and scratched. In the end the most belligerent of the tourists was apprehended, and escorted to the 'lock-up' by a strong body of gendarmes. He alleged he had been brutally maltreated, and on being liberated at six o'clock yesterday (Tuesday) morning he was examined by a medical man, who certified to his injuries. Accompanied by M. Blauwens Vanden Eynde (the proprietor of La Vieille Tour Hotel), the tourist proceeded to the English Consul, where the information was sworn against the police, and an action for assault, damages 1,000*l.*, was entered against the police."

THE RETALIATION BILL.—A Reuter's telegram from Washington announces that the Foreign Committee of the Senate has referred the Retaliation Bill to a sub-committee. It is believed that no immediate action will be taken by the Senate with regard to the measure.

THE DISASTER IN THE CANARIES.—Intelligence received at Madrid from Port Luz, in the Canary Islands, states that nearly all the shipwrecked passengers of the Sud America, which collided with the steamer La France on the 13th inst., have embarked on board an Italian steamer, belonging to the same line, for Genoa. Those who remain behind comprise the persons who received injuries, as well as a few others. The captain also stays to watch the salvage of the treasure and baggage. Thirty-nine bodies have been buried. The captain of the French steamer has published in the local papers in the Canary Islands a defence of his action at the time of the disaster. An official inquiry into the collision is being held.

A BRIXTON MYSTERY.—On Monday afternoon last Mrs. Mary Ann Forward, the wife of Mr. John Forward, who occupies the house situated at 47, St. James's-road, Brixton, was getting some coals out of a cupboard under some stairs, when she discovered a hole in the boarding, and, placing her hand through the aperture for the purpose of ascertaining if any of the coals had fallen through, she drew forth a brown-paper parcel, which was found to contain the body of a male child, with the exception of the head, which had been cut off close to the shoulders. The body was dressed in a white cotton nightgown, the sleeves of which were turned up to the elbow, the whole of which was covered with bloodstains. The police were at once communicated with, and the Divisional surgeon, Dr. Knight, of Brixton-road, was then called. That gentleman states that he believes the deceased was medically attended. Police-constable Morrison, 9 W R, who took the boards up, failed to discover the head.

THE NAVY.—Her Majesty's ship Goshawk, 4, Lieutenant-Commander John H. Pelly, which was recommissioned at Bermuda in February, 1887, will shortly be relieved, on the Cape of Good Hope Station, by the new screw gunboat Pheasant, 6 guns, 755 tons, 1,200 h.-p., she having been ordered to be got ready for sea by the end of October. At the Admiralty, yesterday, the following appointments were announced: Lieutenants—Paul Hewett, to the Ajax; Cecil Henry Wright, to the Tyne (both to date 19th inst.); Lionel Herbert Hordern, to the President, additional (to date 29th inst.). Surgeons—Francis Harvey Julyan, to the Royal Adelaide (to date 25th inst.); Jeremiah Sugrue, to the St. Vincent (to date 19th inst.). Staff Engineers—George Stovell Newton, to the Excellent, additional (to date 1st inst.); Richard Irwin, to the Hearty (to date 19th inst.)

OUTBREAK OF TYPHOID FEVER.—A Lincoln telegram reports that a serious outbreak of typhoid fever has occurred at the Lincolnshire County Asylum. Some of the attendants and patients are stated to have succumbed, and a large number of cases are under treatment.

TAXATION OF CHARITIES.—Mr. J. S. Hodson, secretary to the Printers' Pension, Almshouse, and Orphan Asylum Corporation, writes enumerating the arguments in favour of the exemption of charities from taxation. He points out, among other things, that most of the invested property of charitable institutions has been derived from testamentary bequests, upon which a Parliamentary tax of 10 per cent. has been paid, and that the voluntary contributions of the wealthy and benevolent have formed portions of the income of the donors, upon which income-tax has been previously levied.

THE WHITECHAPEL MURDER.—Dr. L. Forbes Winslow gives it as his opinion, speaking as a physician, "that whatever is the malady we have to combat with, attempts should be made to do so in its earliest stage, and not wait to let the disease has completely laid hold of the victim." Lamplough's Pyretic Saline supplies a safe and reliable antidote to all diseases arising from disordered stomach, indigestion, and liver troubles, and may be had of Chemists everywhere.—(ADVERTISEMENT.)

LORD MONCK AND HIS TENANTRY.

Writing under date St. Mary's Church, Star of the Sea, Irish Town, Dublin, Sept. 18, the Very Rev. John Canon O'Hanlon says:

"It is a pleasing interlude in the present unsettled agrarian relations between landlord and tenant in Ireland that direct negotiations between Lord Monck and the popular agent for the Kilkenny estate of his lordship, near Goresbridge, in the county of Kilkenny, have lately resulted in the purchase of that large property by the tenants, to the number of 130 heads of families. These arrangements were happily arrived at by the Very Rev. Patrick J. Mulhall, P.P., and four of his lordship's tenants, as deputed to represent the interests of the rest, in a personal interview with Lord Monck and his agent at Charleville House, Bray, on terms considered to be equitable by all the parties concerned. Lord Monck's Kilkenny tenants at the best of times were, on the average, never taxed above Griffith's valuation. Like the exceptionally good and popular proprietor Lord Monck has hitherto been, he reduced a rental of about £2,000 a year for his Kilkenny tenants by about 40 per cent., and then he sold, on easy terms, which are sure to be redeemable by the tenants, who henceforth pay their annuities to Government for a term extending over forty-nine years. I feel a deep and sad interest in the case of the Luggacurren tenants, now cast out from their homes; and might I suggest that the people on the estate should try and open negotiations with Lord Lansdowne direct, as Lord Monck's tenants have lately done? Might I suggest that Fathers Kehoe, P.P., and Dempsey, P.P., with Mr. William O'Brien, M.P., and, say, Mr. John Dunne, Ranahowe, ask to represent their case, and meet Lord Lansdowne (before he leaves London for India), with his agent, Mr. Trench, to the fore, and let all, in as conciliatory as in a just spirit, try and heal the heartburnings and discontent now brooding in the spirits of evicted tenants in that once happy and beautiful valley of Luggacurren, so dearly associated with some of my earliest recollections, and so altered for the worse when I visited the scene of desolation there last July, and which could find no parallel in any other civilised country on the habitable globe?"

THE COOK AND THE DRESSMAKER.

Yesterday, in the Edmonton County-court, before Judge Abdy, Selina Mitchell, of Gloucester-terrace, Tanner's-end, Edmonton, dressmaker, sued Miss Elizabeth Bester, of 162, Evering-road, Clapton, cook, for 12s 6d, for work done and materials supplied. There was a counter-claim for 14s, for damages done to materials provided. Plaintiff deposed that defendant brought plush for a dress bodice, which was properly made, and sent home to defendant, who approved the work, except that the bodice did not fit. The next day it was returned for alterations, and it was again sent home to the defendant, who then complained that there was a mark upon the plush. This, plaintiff asserted, was upon the material when it first came into her hands, and was caused through the plush being folded in a box. Plaintiff also stated that defendant wore a different pair of stays on the second occasion to those she wore when she first tried the bodice on, and that made a difference in the fit.—The Judge remarked that if that were so it was certainly wrong; because, according to a report of a recent meeting of the British Association, when there was a long discussion on the subject of stays, it was thought that even one pair of stays was too much; but he was not called upon to settle that point.—Defendant: I wish your honour to understand that in the first instance the bodice did not fit me at all. If produced now it would not fit.—Plaintiff: I say it does fit.—Defendant: I am sure it does not, and I certainly ought to know. (Laughter.)—Plaintiff: Well, your honour, you ought to know that she told me she wanted a very fussy dress, because she wished to attract a nice young man. (Roars of laughter.)—The Judge said the point was whether the article of dress fitted or not. Could not the defendant go into a private room at once and put it on?—Defendant said she was quite willing to put the dress on, so that the judge should see her in it. She told the plaintiff that the dress was not at all suitable, and that she had spoiled the materials.—On the bodice being produced, the Judge observed, amidst laughter, that it was a very brilliant colour.—A witness was called by the plaintiff, and corroborated her statement, adding that the defendant told her that she was highly delighted with the sleeves and the colour. (Laughter.)—Defendant: I told her the bodice did not fit me, and that it could not be altered, so that plaintiff must be the loser.—The Judge said he supposed he ought to know something about dressmaking, seeing the number of cases relating to it that he had before him, but he really did not.—Defendant said the bodice did not fit her across the breast or at the waist, and that plaintiff had made it worse by taking it in.—The Judge (to defendant): Well, you had better go and try it on. (Laughter.) This is the worst of a case of this kind. It is like a breach of promise case, in that it always causes a lot of foolish fun. I do hope that if this good lady tries the dress on and comes into the court again nobody will laugh at her; but I must have it tried on.—Defendant said that nobody who saw the bodice on would give the plaintiff any work, as it did not meet by two inches.—The Judge: Well, go into one of the rooms and put it on.—The High Bailiff: I will take her into my room. (Great laughter.)—The Judge: Is there any one in court who knows anything about dressmaking? (There was no reply.) No; there is nobody.—After a lapse of a minute or two defendant returned into court wearing the bodice. It did not meet in front by some inches.—Plaintiff said the defendant had placed some paper inside the bodice to make it appear too small, and that she (defendant) had on two flannel bodices for the same purpose. (Laughter.)—The Judge remarked that an extra flannel would not make the bodice too small to so great an extent as it appeared to be.—Plaintiff: But she wore different stays at the time it was fitted. (Laughter.)—The Judge observed that the bodice did not fit at all, and added (addressing the plaintiff): Go and try if you can make it meet.—Plaintiff: She won't let me go near her. (Laughter).—The Judge (peremptorily): Go round at once.—Plaintiff declined to do so.—The Judge: Then let your witness go round.—The Witness: I don't understand it. (Laughter.)—Two friends of the defendant tried to get the bodice to meet, but could not do so, whereupon the judge said the dress did not fit, and that defendant was entitled to a verdict.—Plaintiff said that she believed the dress had been tampered with, because when it was first tried on it fitted beautifully—nothing could have been better.—The judge asked defendant if she had altered the dress, and she replied, "Not at all. I only tried to get into it, and I could burst it if I liked. (Laughter.) I have not cut or altered it at all."—Judgment was entered for defendant for both claim and counter-claim.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

CHANCERY DIVISION, SEPT. 19.

TAYLOR v. HOLGATE.

This was a motion on behalf of the defendant, George Holgate, for his release from prison, where he had been since June 15, having been committed for contempt of Court in not having, as an executor in an administration action, presented certain accounts. The defendant now filed an affidavit, in which he stated that he was a mechanic, earning 24s a week, and that the reason why he had not complied with the order of the Court was that he had instructed a solicitor to prepare an account, which was not in the proper form, and he had not sufficient means to prepare another.

The plaintiff raised no objection to the defendant being released, and

His lordship made an order for his release.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, SEPT. 19.

(Before Mr. Registrar [illegible].)

RE JOSEPH ARNOLD CAVE.—Under a petition presented against this debtor, his honour made a receiving order. The debtor, well known in theatrical circles, formerly lessee of the Marylebone Theatre, and more recently of the Elephant and Castle and Sadler's Wells Theatres, is described as a theatre proprietor, present address unknown. The debtor states that he has now no interest in the Sadler's Wells Theatre, which he rented at £20 a week, with the option of a seven, fourteen, or twenty-one years' tenancy; that he is living with private friends, and has no tangible assets. The liabilities did not transpire.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—SEPT. 19.

(Before Mr. Justice CAVE.)

THE ARMED BURGLAR.—[illegible], machinist, pleaded guilty to committing two burglaries at the Fleece Inn and at the King's Head, Lambeth, and also to feloniously shooting at two constables with intent to do them grievous bodily harm. The facts of the case, as stated by the prosecution, showed that on Aug. 21 the prisoner broke into the Fleece, and stole a loaded revolver, some field-glasses, and other property to the value of £4. At about four o'clock on the morning of Aug. 27 the prisoner entered the King's Head public-house, High-street, Lambeth, with two other men, and stole cigars and other property to the amount of about £10. An alarm was raised, and the men decamped, followed by two constables. The prisoner turned and fired at the officer nearest to him. He also discharged one of the chambers of the revolver at the second constable, the bullet striking the metal part of his belt. Eventually the prisoner was overpowered. The stolen property was found on him, and also a black mask. The other men were not captured.—There was a previous conviction against the prisoner, and the judge sentenced him to fifteen years' penal servitude. His lordship especially commended the bravery of Police-constables Mark Jenkins, 185 L, and Herbert Wright, 259 L, who had succeeded in capturing the prisoner, and he ordered that a reward of £5 should be paid to each of them.

NO BILL.—The grand jury ignored the bill against Emily Jane Allen, for attempting to murder Edith Allen and Lewis Allen, and for attempting to commit suicide.

(Before the RECORDER.)

THE GREAT BOND ROBBERY.—Frank Mortimer Eldington Casey, 45, pleaded guilty to stealing a number of Uruguay and other foreign bonds, to the value of £4,000. The prisoner pleaded not guilty to the count of the indictment charging him with personal violence.—The prosecution was conducted by Mr. F. M. Abrahams and Mr. Abinger; while Mr. Russell Biggs appeared for the defence.—Mr. Abrahams said there was a second indictment against Casey, which charged him with stealing Spanish bonds to the value of £2,000, but to that indictment he pleaded not guilty.—The facts of the case have been reported quite recently.—The prisoner made a statement to the effect that he had been ruined by certain Stock Exchange speculations, and that he fully intended to restore the stolen bonds to the prosecutors.—The Recorder passed sentence of eighteen months' imprisonment, with hard labour.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

WESTMINSTER.—THE ART STUDENT IN A NEW LIGHT.—A young Irish lady, who stated that she resided in Sloane-street, Chelsea, renewed an application to Mr. Biron, Q.C., respecting the conduct of her late lodger, an art student, who attended the court on Saturday as then reported.—Applicant, who presented anything but the formidable characteristics attributed to her on Saturday, now stated that her lodger, who was an American, obtained apartments in her house by misrepresentation, inasmuch as he described a lady with him as his niece, although it became evident that their relationship was of a very different nature. He did not pay for the suite of rooms he engaged, and consequently she agreed to accept in part payment of his liability some furniture which he brought, but this was of far less value than the amount of his indebtedness to her. On Saturday when she spoke to him he seized her by the arms and bruised her by forcing her against the bannisters.—Mr. Biron told the applicant (who seemed to be very much upset) that no harm was done her by the fact that one of the warrant officers had called on her to prevent any possible breach of the peace. He (the magistrate) did not sit, as it appeared some people imagined, for the purpose of adjusting domestic quarrels, and he was sorry that disputes of this sort were not arranged by mutual good sense.—Applicant took out the summons against her late lodger.

DALSTON.—MARRIAGE A FAILURE.—Mr. Shiel, in the midst of hearing summonses, exclaimed, "There is a discussion going on as to whether marriage is a failure. It might easily be answered in the police-courts." The case in point was one in which Alfred Wren, a draper's assistant, of Commercial-road E., was summoned for arrears due to his wife Cordelia.—Defendant said he could not afford to pay what was demanded of him. It was not his fault that he did not live with his wife, but he had found this impossible on account of her intemperate habits.—Complainant admitted to the magistrate that she had "drunk a little," but she "had trouble enough to make a woman do anything."—Mr. Shiel said he could not have sympathy for a woman who drank.—Complainant: If he can afford to keep another woman he can keep me.—The magistrate: Yes, that's true; and he must pay what was ordered at Worship-street.

WORSHIP-STREET.—THE STABBING REFERRED.—Charles Foreman, 33, shoemaker, of Weymouth-terrace, Hackney-road, was charged with cutting and wounding Ann Bacon, by stabbing her on the head with a carving knife with intent to do her grievous bodily harm. The parties had passed as man and wife for several years, and on the 11th inst., quarrelling in their room, the woman received a wound from a carving knife which the prisoner had in his hand. The wound was on the left temple, and of a very severe nature, but the prisoner asserted that it was the result of an accident. The woman, he said, had first taken up the knife and threatened him with it, and he wrested it from her, but in the struggle wounded her.—The prosecutrix was questioned by the magistrate as to the truth of that statement; but though she evidently wished to screen the prisoner, she would not admit his version of the matter. It was stated that the prisoner absconded directly after the affair, and was apprehended under a warrant by an officer of Scotland-yard.—Mr. Saunders remanded the prisoner for medical evidence as to the extent of the injury.

THAMES.—PENALTY AGAINST THE EAST LONDON WATER COMPANY.—The secretary of the East London Water Works Company, of 15, St. Helen's-place, was summoned, at the instance of Mr. John Henry Johnson, of St. Anne's Wharf, Limehouse, for refusing to lay on a supply of water to two houses belonging to him.—Mr. George Kebbell appeared on behalf of the company.—The evidence of complainant showed he had recently erected two houses in Northey-street, Limehouse. He had laid on the pipes and fittings in the usual way, and such as the company had allowed him to use in sixty-four other properties within the jurisdiction of that Court. On July 25 he applied to the East London Water Works Company to have the water laid on, and he paid the necessary fees and the rate, for which he held the receipts. The company's men came to his place, and then went away again without having connected the water. He had since repeated his application several times, but without success. He then took out this summons against the company.—In answer to Mr. Kebbell, complainant said the reason given was he declined to put in cisterns. There were waste-preventing fittings over the closets. He objected to having storage cisterns, and that was the reason the company gave for refusing to give him a supply. He had sixty-four cases in which the same thing would apply if he was wrong in this point.—Mr. Kebbell argued that the company were within their rights, and justified in not giving complainant a supply, as he had not conformed to the several sections of the Act of Parliament bearing on the matter. The Act provided for the putting in of a cistern to store the water, and if that was not done they had power to discontinue the supply. The domestic supply in this case was drawn from the main, while the complainant's vessel or receptacle was only for the closets. It was in the interests of the community that there should be proper cisterns affixed to each house, to guard against a famine in case a main burst. During the very dry season of last year they at times pumped up forty millions of gallons of water a day, when ten millions would have sufficed had there not been waste, and their object in insisting on having proper cisterns was to prevent waste. As complainant now had his fixings if the communication pipes were out of repair the houses would get no water supply.—After a long argument Mr. Lushington held that complainant's apparatus was a cistern with a waste preventer inside it. Therefore it was a sufficient receptacle, and complainant had a right to a supply of water. For refusing to supply water on the 28th ult. the company would be fined £5, and 20s for each of the nine following days that the water was not connected, and £1 1s costs.—Mr. Kebbell asked Mr. Lushington to state a case, which the magistrate consented to do.—Complainant: It is a great hardship for me.—Mr. Kebbell: Yes, you will be very sorry you have won this case by the time you get to the House of Lords.

WANDSWORTH.—THE SHOOTING CASE AT MERTON.—James Young surrendered to his bail to further answer the charge of shooting Edgar Woolley, an assistant to his brother, a draper, of High-street, Merton, with intent to murder him.—Detective-inspector Shaw now stated that Woolley left Guy's Hospital on Sunday last, and although inquiries had been made his whereabouts could not be ascertained. He asked the magistrate to grant a further remand, and a summons to compel Woolley's attendance.—Mr. W. A. Colver, who represented the accused, offered no objection to a further remand, and mentioned that on Tuesday he took out a Crown subpœna to enforce Woolley's attendance at that court, but it could not be served. Woolley was reluctant to make his appearance in court, owing to possible revelations as to his relations with other women.—Mr. Plowden granted both applications, and accepted Mr. Colver's bail for the appearance of the accused.

WEST HAM.—THE BURGLAR'S JOKE.—John Jones, 67, a respectable looking man, describing himself as of no occupation, and residing at 15, Harewood-street, Kennington, was charged on remand with breaking and entering the dwelling-house, No. 92, Forest-lane, Forest-gate, and stealing therefrom a sovereign, a shilling, and a sixpence, the moneys of Francis Brown, a solicitor's clerk, and he was now further charged with breaking and entering the dwelling house, No. 6, the Crescent, Upton Manor, and stealing therefrom a quantity of wearing apparel and other goods, the property of John Smith, a bank clerk.—Mr. Willis, jun., prosecuted.—The facts have been fully reported.—After additional evidence Sergeant East, H Division, deposed that in June, 1885, he was at the Middlesex Sessions, when the prisoner was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment, and also ordered to serve one year and seven months of an unexpired term of seven years' penal servitude, to which he had been sentenced at Taunton for forgery.—Prisoner now handed in a written statement relative to the first charge, and sincerely apologised for what he had said as to Mrs. Brown. He added that he had a friend in Forest-lane, and that he went into the house by mistake, and, finding no one was there, determined to give them a surprise. He took the sovereign, and meant subsequently for a joke to treat his friends with their own money. As to the second charge he declared he had had the knife found on him for two months.—He was committed for trial on both the charges.

LONDON, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 20.

Our Paris correspondent telegraphed last night the particulars relating to a discovery made, on Tuesday, on the "Franco-German Frontier." A German gendarme was found dead, shot through the throat.

A conference of Liberal Unionists was held at Bradford yesterday, when resolutions were adopted expressing approval of the course pursued by the Unionists, and urging the extension and completion of the party organisation. In the evening Mr. Chamberlain addressed a crowded meeting, his speech being much interrupted by a minority of Gladstonians who had been admitted without tickets. He announced the determination of himself and his colleagues not to follow Mr. Gladstone in a second proposal with regard to Ireland, the details of which he absolutely refused to disclose. He proceeded to vindicate the conduct of the Government in their administration of the Crimes Act, and insisted that so long as that measure remained the law of the land it must be enforced.

The incorporation of the town of Chelmsford as a municipal borough was celebrated yesterday by a general holiday and a public banquet.

Yesterday the coroner resumed his inquest respecting the death of Mrs. Annie Chapman, who was found murdered in a yard in Hanbury-street, Whitechapel, on the 8th inst. Dr. Phillips, the divisional surgeon, who made the post-mortem examination, was recalled, and entered into detailed particulars as to the nature of the mutilations inflicted upon the victim. A portion of the body had been removed, and he inferred that it was to obtain possession of this that the operation had been performed. The manner in which the incision had been made indicated a certain amount of anatomical knowledge, and the witness could not himself have effected it, even if there had been no struggle, in less than a quarter of an hour. One other important piece of evidence was that of a woman who saw the deceased talking with a shabby-genteel-looking man, whom she judged to be a foreigner, at half-past five on the morning of the 8th, near the spot where the body was discovered half an hour later. The inquest was adjourned for a week, when the jury will settle the terms of their verdict.

Three members of the Salvation Army who have been imprisoned in Holloway Gaol in connection with charges of obstruction were released yesterday morning, and were met at the gates by two or three hundred of their comrades and conducted in triumph to the Chalk Farm "barracks," where breakfast was provided, and several speeches were delivered.

Arthur Bounce pleaded guilty at the Central Criminal Court yesterday to committing two burglaries in Lambeth and shooting at two police-constables with intent to do them grievous bodily harm. The learned Judge sentenced the prisoner to fifteen years' penal servitude, and ordered the two constables to be rewarded.

General buoyancy was apparent yesterday on the Stock Exchange, and an important rise occurred in English, Canadian, and American railways. Mexican (Vera Cruz) were rather better. The inquiry extended to Foreign Government Bonds and copper shares. Diamond mines were steady. A net influx of £13,000 in gold was reported at the Bank.

SINCE the season of universal speech-making has inevitably come round again, and political clamour must needs grow hotter as the year becomes colder, it is a welcome sign at any rate to see the friends of the Union and of Law having the first innings. Yesterday, at Bradford, a Conference of Liberal Unionists was held followed by a remarkable address from Mr. CHAMBERLAIN; and, alike at the preliminary meeting and in the language of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN's discourse, there were to be heard the unmistakable notes of approaching triumph for common-sense and unity. It is generally the case that the interest of these gatherings centres in the "speech of the evening," and certainly that which graced and crowned the proceedings at Bradford deserved all the enthusiasm which it evoked. Yet the piece before the play—the prefatory assemblage of Liberal and Conservative Unionists in the Technical School—was, on this occasion, full also of importance and public interest, on account of the brief but telling remarks heard, the highly practical resolutions passed, and the two very valuable letters which were read from Lord HARTINGTON and the Earl of DERBY. The message from the first-named statesman, clear as a trumpet-call and straight as an arrow's flight, pointed out how steadfastly the Unionist alliance had stood against what a subsequent speaker justly called "the conspiracy aiming at the dismemberment of the Empire"; and how it had, while preserving the Union against a fatuous and sentimental intrigue, furnished the country with an active legislative policy productive of excellent results. Predicting assured victory, Lord HARTINGTON enjoined concord and perseverance, and nothing better could have been said or written to open the forthcoming campaign. Lord DERBY addressed himself to the outcry against Mr. BALFOUR and that needful enforcement of the laws which is so absurdly styled "coercion." His letter shrewdly asked whether those who incite to violence and resistance against Acts of Parliament are with any reason to be called martyrs when the constable lays hands upon them, and whether, if Home Rulers had Ireland to themselves, they would venture to apply generally their precious principle that rent is an optional debt, and that tenants ought to be allowed to occupy other people's land and houses as long as they like without paying for them. In the opinion of Lord DERBY, the contest is as good as ended. The influence of the National League is fast waning; its funds are drying up; the priests, obeying the admonition of the Vatican, abstain from taking sides with associations of plunder and social tyranny; and, as we have lately seen, there is a split of a fatal kind between the adherents of Mr. DAVITT and the advocates of the Gladstonian alliance. Other and abundant tokens of collapse in the Home Rule hubbub justify the forecast of Lord DERBY, and lend significance to the hearty vote of thanks moved and carried yesterday to Liberal Unionists. They have indeed well defended the breach which Mr. GLADSTONE surrendered. It is repaired again, and we believe impregnably; nor is anything necessary now, except that the entire vast party of the Friends of the Union and of Law should carry into practice the resolutions yesterday adopted at Bradford. They must continue—Liberals and Conservatives—to sink all minor differences; they must agree to unite resolute administration with beneficent legislation in Ireland; and they must register, organise, and educate their ever-growing majority until the course of events and the good sense of the Irish people make the turmoil and folly of a transient agitation seem like a bad dream passed away.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN was naturally welcomed in the great meeting which ensued as one of the best possible representatives of those Liberal Unionists who have rendered so [illegible] a service to their generation and country, by defending the integrity of the Kingdom, maintaining the supremacy of Parliament, and enabling Her Majesty's Government to pass, at least, some of the important general measures for which Mr. PARNELL had kept us all waiting Session after Session. Nor did the right honourable gentleman fail to rise to the level of the opportunity thus provided him for vindicating his own attitude and that of his Liberal associates, as well as of [illegible] the resolve of the nation finally to defeat the Irish conspiracy. It was only [illegible] at Bradford not to be reminded [illegible] of Mr. FORSTER; and the allusions of [illegible] to the changeless patriotism and [illegible] departed Unionist were received in a manner which showed that Yorkshiremen have formed their strong opinion for themselves of the attempts recently made to misrepresent his policy and diminish his great reputation. Passing from that tribute to the well-remembered dead, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN sketched in bold and forcible lines the history of the division caused in the Liberal party by the sudden adhesion of Mr. GLADSTONE to the men and the objects which he had been wont to denounce. Since the overwhelming defeat first in Parliament and next at the General Election of that misguided movement, the Separatists have been without a policy. They possess no flag, no programme—nothing but a Leader, whom they have blindly followed, and who gives them no plan or project to advocate. They are thus driven to reiterated and wearisome abuse of Mr. BALFOUR, and recommendations of what they style the "union of hearts," which is to betide, forsooth, as soon as we hand over the loyal minority in Ireland to the disloyal majority, and agree that Irish tenants are not to pay rent unless quite agreeable to themselves. In a very fine oratorical outburst of contempt and irony, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN showed what sort of "union of hearts" would have resulted, or would now result, from abandoning the Union and helping Mr. GLADSTONE's Irish allies to "sever the last link." Ulster would never have assented—would never now assent—to the conditions of the Separatist Bill, and therefore the enemies of coercion would have had to begin by coercing the most intelligent, industrious, and peaceful part of Ireland into submission. When that was effected—if it could have been—the "union of hearts" would have been further illustrated, probably by a refusal to pay the contribution to the Imperial Exchequer on the ground of poverty, disinclination, differing policy, or what not; and an English army would next have had to break up the new Irish Parliament. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN profited admirably by the interruptions caused in a dissentient corner of the meeting to point to the real "coercion" in Ireland which all true-hearted men ought to denounce. To enforce law made by Parliament is not to be thus denominated, unless we have all ceased to observe the first rule of constitutional life. The real "coercion" which has been cursing Ireland is that which oppresses and terrifies the peaceful citizen and honest payer of his debts—the coercion of the moonlighter, of the cattle-mutilator, of the boycotter, of the National Leaguer, of the agitator, and inciter to violent and illegal deeds. All this, of course, was plain enough already to right-minded men; but it is useful to have the truth put before the public again in such large letters that all except the wilfully-blind can and must read it.

In language of the same force and lucidity, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN went on to expose the intrinsic absurdities of the cry against "Coercion," and to show how slight is the difference between the administration of the laws in Ireland and England. Truly to hear and read what has been said and written on this theme by Separatist speakers, one would think they had broken adrift from every principle of Constitutional practice and ordered society, and were preparing to legislate by emotion, and to repeal laws by howls and yells and inarticulate outcries. The fact to which their estranged intellects must be led back is the vote of the nation at the last General Election. They may say what they like about the constituencies being "surprised," or not comprehending the blessings of Mr. PARNELL's government of Ulster, or what else; but that vote created the existing Parliament, Parliament passed the Crimes Act, and the Act must therefore be obeyed, unless we are to slide back into anarchy. Pitiable it must appear that commonplaces of the general British system like these have, in this age, to be repeated; and the immense value of respect for existing statutes urged upon statesmen who have in bygone years helped to make them. Yet such a necessity exists, amid the welter of weak sentiment and slipshod sympathy now freely current as "politics." It was, therefore, a very solid and timely service to the nation which Mr. CHAMBERLAIN rendered yesterday evening by putting into plain English the truth about "union of hearts," coercion, tenants' woes, and the rest of it. The Irish tenants, as he showed the Bradford men, are to-day more favoured than any such class elsewhere in the world, and unjust evictions have become in the nature of things impossible. It is, indeed, a mirage of nonsense that we have been passing through, a morass of sentimental uproar; but the air is clearing, the firm earth is again under the feet of the public of the United Kingdom, and Ireland herself is perhaps the most sick of the turmoil which now begins to die down.

IT is pleasant to find that even in France, the chosen home and seat of political rancour, the duration of party animosities is subject to some sort of "statutory limitation." BUFFON, the great French naturalist, and one of the greatest of French writers, died at Montbard, in the Côte d'Or, exactly a hundred years ago, and the centenary of his death—a somewhat singular date for his admirers to select for commemoration—has just been celebrated by a fête of a pre-eminently national character, at which several leading Republicans, Senators, and Deputies were present. No one probably would have been more surprised at their presence than GEORGE LOUIS LE CLERC, Comte DE BUFFON, an aristocrat born and bred, whose son perished on the scaffold during the Terror, and who, but for his own timely death on the eve of the Revolution, would hardly himself have escaped the same violent end. Dying, as he did, before that outbreak of the cruel madness which treated the accident of birth as the effacement of the noblest public services, BUFFON received all the funeral honours which were his due. Twenty thousand people congregated to see his body laid in the vault at Montbard, by the side of his wife. Savants, members of the learned Academies, and many other persons of scientific or literary distinction, attended his obsequies. His eulogium was pronounced by the illustrious CONDORCET among others. Yet in little more than five years from that time the fury of revolutionary iconoclasm had descended upon Montbard. The remains of the great zoologist were torn from his grave; the lead in which he was hearsed was seized upon for plunder; and his monument was levelled with the ground. Afterwards, when a citizen to whom science was dear complained to the Committee of Public Instruction of the outrage, and proposed that BUFFON should have a place in the Pantheon, he was told that the temple would be profaned by the presence of one who had been connected with the aristocracy of France. Happily this desecration of the tomb of him whom the whole country had a few years back delighted to honour was not the absolute "last word" even of the First Republic on the subject. Some time later the Convention ordered a monument to be placed over the violated grave; and now, as we have just seen, the leading men of the Third Republic are, so to speak, completing the re-erection of the sepulchre of him whom their fathers stoned. The estimation in which this most laborious of students and most fascinating of writers now stands among his countrymen is, we may safely say, assured to him. Time has done its worst upon BUFFON's classifications and on the theoretical element in his work. Much, if not most, of this has been entirely superseded by the conclusions of subsequent investigators; but the imperishable part of him remains—the vivid imagination which even his scientific habit did not always sufficiently chasten, the command of picturesque and lucid description, the exquisite gift of style. The day has of course gone by since enthusiastic admirers knelt, as [illegible] did, to kiss the threshold of Buffon's study; but it still in a very genuine sense deserves the appellation of the "cradle of natural history" given to it by Prince Henry of Prussia, and the name of its laborious occupant, who boasted that he had spent fifty years at his desk, is one which Frenchmen will always hold in honour.

Science is a mistress with many devoted lovers, but we doubt whether any form of scientific study has ever commanded such patient, such untiring, such disinterested devotion as has that of natural history. Buffon, in his Burgundian retreat; [illegible], in the calm academic towers of the Transatlantic Cambridge; Darwin, in his tranquil Kentish home, asked nothing from Nature but the privilege of dedicating to her service their lives of incessant and laborious research. Buffon was in his study every morning for half a century, with his letters written, and his household affairs for the day regulated, by six o'clock, and here he passed a life as regular and, as all but the student would think, as monotonous as that which, in the curious soliloquy of the trouble-worn Henry VI., "brings the white hairs" of a shepherd "to a quiet grave." How Darwin's days were spent, and in what dutiful watchfulness of those processes of life and development which he set himself to study, we have already learnt from a filial biographer; and with men in whom the habit of observation is so systematically scientific—with men like Gilbert White of Selborne, and the late lamented Mr Jefferies—the same enthusiastic patience is always to be noted. The truth is that the passion for studying the ways of the animal kingdom is, however philosophers may explain the fact, the earliest, the most deeply-rooted and the most lasting of all the impulses of human inquiry. The poet may tell us that "the proper study of mankind is man"; but if Pope meant by this that the investigation of the habits and peculiarities of his own species is the most natural instinct of humanity, the proposition is refuted by every group of delighted children at the Zoological Gardens, and, indeed, by every Noah's ark of the nursery. Strangely enough the study of the human animal, whether in his physiological, his psychological, or his social aspects, is a branch of inquiry which interests but a very small proportion, comparatively speaking, of the human race. Whether it be that early familiarity with the main outward characteristics of the genus homo has blunted the curiosity of most of us by the period when youthful intelligence has fully awakened, or whether it be that the young explorer arrives betimes at the cynical conviction that man is the least interesting of animals, it is certain that the curiosity of the juvenile mind is almost always first aroused and stimulated by the sight of beings belonging to a different order of creation from his own. The picture-books which most fascinate the child are invariably those of which zoology and its marvels supply the principal contents. "Reineke Fuchs" was the beau ideal of the mediæval world. To a large extent the fables of Æsop owe their perennial popularity to the brute actors, whose sayings and doings point the moral of the apologue. Cowper declared that "he would not use Jean Jacques Rousseau, if [illegible]," referring to the fact that that strange moralist, who had more facilities for the observation of children than he cared to utilise, had impugned the propriety of attributing the human faculty of speech to the lower animals in books intended for the young; yet the practice is still a testimony to the fact that the surest way to a child's attention was through his interest in the brute creation.

Zoology, in short, makes naturally and almost necessarily the first great appeal of which the nascent intelligence is susceptible to the human instinct of inquiry. It is the child's golden passkey into a world of wonders; it is the "Open Sesame," not to one cave of mystery but to a hundred, and all of them possessing that recommendation so dear to the intensely literal mind of childhood—that their contents are "real and not make-believe." And, while the study of zoology is the earliest to attract, it is also one of the most potent to humanise its young devotees. Children, it has been often and sometimes sorrowfully pointed out, are not by nature disposed to a broad sympathy with other forms of life. The scientific inquisitiveness of the nursery too often goes about armed with a pin, and its observations of the cat are too apt to be conducted in a prematurely experimental spirit. By a fortunate provision of Nature, however, the instinct of curiosity is usually born about the same time as the impulse to destruction, and if the former is judiciously cultivated and gratified it will, in most cases, soon get the better of the other. Curiosity, properly directed and satisfied, leads to the acquisition of knowledge, and knowledge is the only true progenitor of rational and enduring sympathy. There is no more effective method for awakening in the mind of childhood that invaluable consciousness of kindred with the lower world of animals than an early and practical induction into the study of natural history. We are fortunate in possessing in this country, and indeed in this capital, an exceptional supply of the means for pursuing such a course of study. The magnificent Museum of Natural History at South Kensington is, we venture to say, superior to any like institution to be found in Continental countries; and, to pass from the dead to the living specimen, our zoological collection at Regent's Park will equally defy the competition of any foreign rival. It is, however, not absolutely without precedent to find that our mode of utilising our advantages is not exactly on the same level of superiority as these advantages themselves, and we fear that we are not altogether free from the reproach in the case of our Zoological Gardens. In one sense they are, no doubt, highly popular; but it is open to question whether it is popularity in the broadest and most catholic sense of the word. They have delighted and instructed many thousands of the young; but the Metropolis does not reckon its juvenile population by any numerals so insignificant as the thousand, and, if it were asked how many of the two or three millions of London children have ever found their way to that abode of marvels, we are afraid the answer would be unsatisfactory. The price, for one thing, is prohibitory to large numbers of the population; the days of admission unsuitable for many more. Surely the time has now arrived when the gardens might occasionally, at any rate, be thrown open at a nominal sum to the people of London on a Sunday; and when, also, through the publication of some cheap and compendious "handbook of the exhibits," long gravely wanted by many even of their ordinary visitors, the humanising effects of one of the most "human" of all studies might be brought in reality and in no idle phrase "within reach of the masses."

Will there ever be a surcease of man's seemingly ineradicable belief in treasure islands, sunken galleons, and hidden stores of precious stones, such as Monte Cristo found in his Mediterranean cave, and Mr. Rider Haggard held forth as baits to Allan Quatermain and his two [illegible] companions in "King Solomon's Mines"? It is never much difficulty in inducing a few adventurous spirits to form a syndicate and subscribe money to raise a hypothetical man-of-war heavily laden with pillar-dollars, which sank some one or two centuries since in the Gulf of Mexico or off the coast of Portugal. [illegible] the surface of Spain itself is popularly believed to be larded with buried treasure the precise position of which is known to one or two [illegible] speculators, [illegible] Spanish-Americans, [illegible] find their way to London in search of [illegible], varying from five hundred to ten thousand pounds, for which they gladly promise [illegible] a hundredfold return when they have unearthed their "hidden pile." Who that is acquainted with Central and Southern America will be surprised to learn that a limited company, with a capital of forty thousand dollars, or about eight thousand pounds, has just been formed at Mollendo, a small seaport in Peru, having for its object the discovery of the graves of Peruvian Incas and [illegible], many of whom are said to have been [illegible] with large sums of money and valuable ornaments and jewels stored away in their [illegible]? Such is the appetite of all human beings for speculation, and such their readiness to believe that wealth may be easily and rapidly acquired by hunting for hidden treasure rather than by the slow gains of daily industry and self-denial, that the formation of companies like the one just referred to will probably never come to an end. It is true that ever since the death of Pizarro Peru has been regarded as a Tom Tiddler's Ground by adventurers of all kinds and all nations, and that, according to Mr. Hugh Murray, "the opening of these Peruvian huacas, or tombs, has often proved a great prize to European explorers, one of whom found and carried away with him a treasure in gold of the value of one hundred and fifty thousand pounds." Peru was one of the two monarchies in South America which, on the invasion of the Spaniards, about 1530, had attained a degree of wealth and refinement far superior to that found on the rest of the continent. Moreover, the Peruvian civilisation contrasted strangely with that found by Cortez in Mexico. Instead of the fierce spirit, the sanguinary wars, the uncouth deities, and ferocious rites of the Mexicans, the Peruvians were united in tranquil subjection to a mild superstition, which represented their Inca as the Child of the Sun, the supreme source of light, heat, and power. However much fable may be mixed up with truth in the tale of the first descent from the heights of the Andes of Manco Capac, the founder of the Peruvian Empire, there can be none in the story of the greatness and opulence of the kingdom to which Manco Capac's descendants succeeded. Complete order and obedience prevailed over a dominion two thousand miles in length and about three hundred in breadth. The land was carefully cultivated, and, as moisture was the chief want, the rivers were diverted into irrigating canals, and terraces were scooped out of the mountains to receive them. A grand imperial road was made from Cuzco to Quito, a distance of fifteen hundred miles, and the skill with which natural obstacles were surmounted and flying bridges thrown across impassable ravines still excites the admiration of the American engineers, with Mr. Meiggs at their head, who at vast expense and with consummate ability, have constructed Peruvian railways from the coast to the very summit of the Cordilleras.

Despite the mildness of their religious rites and the gentleness of their dispositions, the Peruvians, whom Pizarro subjugated, retained one practice marked by the deepest barbarity. On the death of their Inca, or even of one of their great chiefs, considerable numbers of his vassals were interred along with the departed magnate, and a large portion of his wealth, in the form of ingots of gold, silver, and precious stones, was buried with him. It is due to this well-authenticated custom, and to the success which has occasionally attended the efforts of previous explorers of Peruvian tombs, that the Mollendo Company, to which we have already referred, has sprung into existence. In Caxamarca, for instance, an Indian family still exists which boasts that it is descended from Atahualpa, the last Peruvian Inca, who was ruthlessly murdered by Pizarro, after an enormous ransom had been paid for his life. The very room in Atahualpa's palace at Caxamarca is still exhibited where that unhappy prince was confined, a room which shows upon its walls the marks placed there by Pizarro, up to which he demanded that the silver paid for Atahualpa's ransom should be piled. Three centuries later another Indian, Pumacagua by name, rose in rebellion against the Peruvian Government, and was defeated, brought to trial, and ordered for execution. Addressing the judge by whom he had been condemned to death, Pumacagua offered to give more gold in ransom for his life than Atahualpa had given in silver. The offer was declined, and he died with his secret unrevealed; yet many years since an old Indian woman told Mr. Clements Markham that her father had been a colleague of Pumacagua, and had seen the latter enter a room at Cuzco, dripping wet and laden with gold, which he had brought from a cave approached by wading along the bed of the Huatanay River. Such stories are more than sufficient to inflame the cupidity of ignorant speculators, who believe with ready alacrity that Peru still holds more buried ingots than her mines sent across the Atlantic in the days when the ocean was alive with Spanish galleons. Thus it is related by Felipe de Romanis that underneath the old Castle of Cuzco, the capital of the Incas, there is a vault containing many figures of Peruvian grandees wrought in pure gold, which had been seen in his day by one Doña Maria de Esquivel. Being a Spanish woman, she was said to have married a descendant of the Incas, whom she reproached for being too poor to support her properly. Irritated by her querulous complaints, he led her blindfolded through many subterranean passages into a room where the veil was withdrawn from her eyes, and "she gazed on such wealth as mortal had never dreamed of."

It was remarked by Humboldt, when he made his first visit to Peru early in the present century, that its simple-minded and unmercenary inhabitants, although surrounded on all sides by buried treasure, never thought of troubling themselves to get hold of riches. In answer to Humboldt's astonished inquiries, the Peruvian Indians told him that each of them had his plot of wheat and maize, and that money or money's worth would not make them happier. The sad story of the cruel fate which overtook Atahualpa, the last of the Incas, is still current among the Indians and Mestizos on the slopes of the Andes. When in captivity Atahualpa offered to give Pizarro a room-full of gold and silver if he would spare his life. Pizarro demanded double the amount offered, and the ill-fated Inca undertook to find it, and sent out his messengers for that purpose. As these emissaries made their way back to Cuzco, laden with treasure, they heard that Atahualpa had been strangled, and threw down their loads, which were buried among the mountains. It will doubtless be part of the work undertaken by the Sociedad Exploradora of Mollendo to hunt for these precious loads thrown down three and a half centuries since by Atahualpa's messengers, and never heard of from that day to this. We trust, however, that the sanguine subscribers to this enterprising company have something of a less vague and shadowy description in pursuit of which to spend their dollars. The Lake of Urcos, for example, of almost unfathomable depth, is said to contain the golden chain of the Incas, "every link of which was as thick as a man's arm, and its length so great that it went twice round the great square of Huacapata." It was thrown into the Lake of Urcos to preserve it from the Spaniards, who subsequently attempted to drain off the water, but found it too laborious a task. The Spanish, or American, "Exploring Society" will doubtless try their luck in angling for this great golden chain with as much success, probably, as has hitherto been the result of many efforts to rescue the seven-branched golden candlestick of Jerusalem from the mud of the Tiber. Although gold chains "as thick as a man's body" and subterranean gardens studded with gold trees may safely be looked on as coinages of the brain, the newly-formed company will, perhaps, find profitable occupation in turning up old Peruvian graves and searching for trinkets and precious metals which they may be thought likely to contain.

Sympathetic students of the minor illustrated periodicals published in Paris can scarcely have failed to observe that within the last year or two the delineators of social manners in the journals in question have been awakening to the knowledge that John Bull is wont to indulge in other sports and pastimes in addition to "la boxe" and "le raceborsemanship," to say nothing of a more mysterious diversion supposed to be popular in these islands, and termed by our volatile neighbours "le rally-paper," which may be assumed to be a recondite form of "paper-chase." The artists and writers of such diverting sheets as "La Vie Parisienne" and "Le Petit Journal pour Rire" have at length made the pleasant discovery that among the sons and daughters of Albion the game of croquet—not unfrequently spelt "crockette"—has been in a great measure superseded by "le lawn-tennis," although the imaginative draughtsmen of Lutetia have yet to learn that it is not precisely imperative upon a young lady on lawn-tennis bent to equip herself for the tournament in a blouse and knickerbockers, with her lower extremities swathed in criss-cross sandals like unto those of an Italian brigand. However, that the lively Gaul should have been induced to recognise the popularity of outdoor games among all classes of the community in England must be considered as decidedly a step in advance, and still further progress has been made in this highly desirable acquaintance with our insular manners and customs, by the sprightly French essayist, so well and so favourably known in this country under the pseudonym of "Philippe Daryl," who is contributing a most interesting series of articles on English games and sports to a leading Parisian newspaper. It must be premised that M. "Philippe Daryl" is an uncompromising advocate of athleticism, of which, to all seeming, he finds the "beau-ideal" on British soil; and he has discoursed most graphically, and, as a rule, with unimpeachable accuracy, not only on lawn-tennis, but on rounders, cricket, and football; and though of the last violent exercitation he is not an admirer, yet, on the whole, he bestows enthusiastic commendation on muscular training as pursued on this side of the Channel. For gymnastic exercises he has the profoundest contempt, and declares that the gymnasia recently attached to French public schools have turned out to be so many patent and notorious fiascos. "One has only," he remarks, "to watch a detachment of lycéens on their lamentable promenade on Thursday afternoon to be convinced of this."

A considerable sum of British gratitude is undeniably due to M. "Philippe Daryl" for his generous and unstinted appreciation of our proficiency in outdoor recreations of an exuberantly physical kind; but, at the same time, it may be considered a moot-point as to whether his enthusiasm in the cause of al-fresco athletics has not carried him a little too far, and whether gymnasia conducted on really scientific principles have actually proved the failure which he declares them to be. A well-appointed gymnastic apparatus comprises, among other things, a thick pole and a thin pole up which to "shin," a knotted rope and a swinging pole up which to climb, bars to leap over, a Saracen's head to be "shied" at, a quintain at which to tilt, and clubs to brandish and to poise at different angles. Gymnastics, properly taught and earnestly persevered in, have proved an immense sanitary boon to girls, and it would be little less than absurd to argue that exercises which call every one of the muscles into play without too violently exerting them can be productive of anything but good to the frame. Of course there may be abuse in what the Greeks called "agonistical" training; and, when gymnastics begin to impinge on the perilous domain of acrobatism, it is time, perhaps, to halt. It is desirable to train a generation of agile and robust boys and girls, not of contortionists and "saltimbanques"; but do not precisely the same objections apply to excessive indulgence in our outdoor sports? How many maladies may be traced to over-football-playing and over-rowing? Is there not an ailment known as the "bicyclist's back," and another the "tennis elbow"—by which quite recently a champion player was incapacitated. M. Daryl should remember that it is surely better that the lycéens, or collegians, whose "lamentable" aspect when out walking he deplores so pathetically should have some modicum of gymnastic training than that they should be deprived almost entirely of muscular education. Formerly nothing worthy of the name of a playground was to be found in any French school, large or small; and, as to those glorious playing-fields at Eton in which the Iron Duke is said to have declared that Waterloo was won—forgetting that on the 18th of June, 1815, he had under his command some thousands of Horse, foot, and dragoons, who had not been educated in the shadow of "the distant spires," and "antique towers that crown the watery glade"—there is no French college or school which possesses such marvellous incentives to boyish pleasure, and the consequent improvement of physical vigour. A Gallic playground is usually nothing but "la cour"—a barren quadrangular expanse between four high walls, and there the ordinary games, prior to the introduction of gymnasia, were "barres" or prisoner's base, leap-frog, hooping, and battledore and shuttlecock. In some schools there might be a feeble form of quoits, and in others a pale imitation of an English fives court. At least gymnastic exercises may be regarded as a pleasant and healthy alternative to sports so tame and so restricted as those which we have enumerated; but, on the other hand, it is far from improbable that for two reasons systematic gymnastics have failed to become popular in French educational centres. In the first place, these gymnastics naturally partake of the character of drill, and of that the French school-boy has always enough and to spare. He is drilled morning, noon, and night; and the doleful fact that he is a creature doomed to incessant and inexorable drill is further impressed on his mind by his being constrained to wear a semi-military uniform. His lessons, his "promenades" are only so many varieties of drill; and since the war the drill-sergeant has got still tighter hold of him as a unit in those "bataillons scolaires" which, when their members attain adolescence, will, it is confidently expected, loom large in the forefront of the battle of "la Revanche." In the next place, the French collegian may not care about gymnastics, because he knows full well that such muscular training is a regular feature of education at all German schools, where the boys know little, if anything, about the out-door sports so dear to English juveniles, although they are so carefully trained in physical exercises as to be fully qualified on their assumption of the "toga virilis" for admission to a "Turnverein."

Like most enthusiasts, M. "Philippe Daryl" is inclined to be dogmatical. In England, he says, methodical exercise counts for nothing, and active recreation is everything. The most athletic races have never been near a gymnasium. "The English, wiser than the French, have understood this truth; so they put bats and oars in their children's hands, and leave them to follow their own devices in the open air!" Do they? The majority of English people hold that the soul of athletic proficiency is "training," and that the athlete must be surely and carefully trained, whether he is to row in the University Boat-race, or whether the final cause of his training is to be the "little mill" between the Bradford Bantam and the Barnsley Bullpup for fifty pounds a side. England is the only country in Europe in which there are professional walkers, runners, oarsmen, and cricketers, who have all been studiously trained to their work. We have to most intents and purposes a monopoly in the supply of jockeys to the racecourses of the Continent. Does the lively French essayist imagine that our jockeys are untrained? His contention, too, that "the most athletic races have never been near a gymnasium" is transparently incorrect. The ancient Greeks went so near the gymnasium as almost to live in it; and there is scarcely a modern game or sport, whether of strength or of dexterity, that was not sedulously taught and religiously practised in ancient Hellas. According to M. "Philippe Daryl," the only soldiers who at present enter the French Army, and who have any muscle about them, are peasants and workmen who have never set foot in a gymnasium. M. Daryl forgets that the French law of conscription is a huge drag-net which sweeps into its maw all sorts and conditions of youth; that peasants, most of whose lives are passed in the open air, and in the labours of husbandry, are necessarily much more robust than town-bred lads; but that every regiment is practically a school of gymnastics, where, if a young fellow have really any physical stamina, it will surely be developed. It must not be omitted to mention that M. Daryl maintains that all the English games of which he is much enamoured owe their origin to the France of the olden time, and that his countrymen have only to revive their use in France to make them nationally their own once more. If our friendly French critic will consult the "excursus" on games in Professor Becker's "Charicles," he will find that the games which he thinks to be of old French origin are in reality of the oldest Greek extraction.

Lord Brooke and Colonel the Hon. Charles and Lady Cecily Gathorne-Hardy have joined the guests staying with the Duke of Richmond and Gordon at Gordon Castle.

The Bishop of Bedford, acting as Commissary for the Bishop of London, has licensed the Rev. Dr. E. Ker Gray, Incumbent of Curzon Chapel, Mayfair, to be Minister of St. George's Chapel, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly.

A Reuter's telegram, dated Tangier, Sept. 19, states: "General Boulanger is reported to have arrived here incognito from Cadiz, on board the Spanish Transatlantic steamer Tanger."

PARIS DAY BY DAY.

[BY SPECIAL WIRE.]

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

PARIS, Wednesday Night.

Brilliant sunshine, the bluest of skies, and a pleasant breeze withal are making amends for the decidedly bad Season from which we have emerged, and as the weather-prophets are predicting a continuance of this agreeable state of things, the prospect is by no means so dismal as it was a few weeks ago. The Parisians who are still disporting themselves at the sea-side may be trusted to make the most of the situation and to delay the date of their return to the Boulevards as long as possible; but the termination of the school-holidays will, perforce, bring many families back to town, and as Parliament is to re-assemble rather earlier than usual, affairs will once more be in full swing at the beginning of October, and whatever fine weather remains to be enjoyed must be turned to the best account here. People are talking to-day about the suspension of work at the Eiffel-Tower, to which I drew your attention last evening. Most of the men were expected to resume their labours this morning, but their Delegates failed to convince them of the advisability of accepting their employer's conditions, and M. Eiffel has decided that if the hands fail to "put in an appearance" to-morrow he will put others in their places. It is, however, quite "on the cards" that the matter may be arranged at any moment. A goodly section of the ouvriers are merely holding out because they are afraid of being molested by their comrades if they desert them. These are the senior employés, who have been years with their present employer. M. Eiffel has already offered several concessions, and as the men have not yet claimed their wages they are not technically considered to be "on strike." Many of them were loitering outside the works in the bright sunshine this afternoon, and another set, with bundles under their arms, were waiting about, all ready to engage themselves on the first opportunity. M. Eiffel himself was inspecting the Tower, and he is resolved on continuing the work to-morrow morning, with his old or a new staff.

Some sensation has been created on the Franco-German frontier by the discovery on French territory, near Suarce, of the corpse of a German gendarme, whose neck had been perforated by a bullet. The French gendarmerie have opened an inquiry into this mysterious affair. Suarce is a village of some five hundred inhabitants, through which runs the Suarcine Rivulet. It lies about a mile from the frontier, from which it is separated by a number of hillocks covered with bushes. The body was found yesterday in one of these bushes, barely thirty yards, according to one account, from the border. Suarce is situated about eleven miles from Belfort, and the judicial authorities of the fortress-town were to proceed thither to-day for the purpose of holding an investigation. The theory which finds most favour is that the German gendarme committed suicide, but some of the villagers incline to the opinion that he may have been killed by German smugglers on his side of the frontier, and that the body may afterwards have been dragged across the boundary-line. The inquiry that has been instituted will, no doubt, throw complete light on the matter.

Mahomet undoubtedly had prying Occidentals in his mind's eye when he ordained that Islamite women should always be veiled. The injunctions of the Prophet have, however, been set at nought by some inquisitive French notaries at Blidah, in Algeria, who insisted that certain Oriental ladies, who went to their offices accompanied by their husbands for the purpose of signing legal documents, should take off their veils. The legal practitioners having thus been able to defy the "Sunna," and to feast their Frankish eyes on the noses, mouths, and chins of the female Children of the Faithful, the husbands of the Islamite ladies literally rose en masse, and laid their grievances before the local Municipal Council and the Assembly of the Mussulman Notables. M. Ferrouillat, Minister of Justice, was accordingly communicated with on the subject, and he has just addressed a letter to Senator Mauguin, Mayor of Blidah, in which he very justly tells that gentleman to remind the notaries that the Law of December, 1842, affords every necessary means of identifying the female followers of the Prophet without obliging them to uncover their faces.

General Boulanger continues to cause his political opponents much anxiety, for in spite of all the attempts made to explain it away his "triple election" was a decided triumph. During the recess a certain number of politicians have come round to the view that a fatal blunder was made when the General's name was removed from the Active-list, and there is a growing feeling that the best course to be pursued would be to reinstate him in his old position. It has even been rumoured that M. Ferrouil, Member for the Department of the Aude, intends bringing a proposal to this effect before the Chamber, and although this report is incorrect it is by no means impossible that some other Deputy may do so instead. M. Henri Rochefort has just given an interlocutor an account of a conversation which he had with M. Floquet a few days before his Ministry was formed. It was at dinner at the Palais-Bourbon and General Boulanger, M. Clemenceau, and M. Andrieux were among the guests. In the course of the evening M. Rochefort took M. Floquet aside and advised him to offer the War-office to the General. He argued that with M. Boulanger as Minister of War the Cabinet would be sure of a long existence, as the Country would approve, and the Chamber would not dare to oust M. Floquet and his colleagues. As the guests departed M. Rochefort told the General that he felt convinced that M. Floquet would offer him the Portfolio. M. Rochefort adds that M. Floquet must now be aware of the error which he committed, and he attributes the Premier's animus against the General entirely to this cause. M. Paul de Cassagnac is represented as favourable to the General's re-installation, for he thinks that if War were unhappily to break out, he alone could create in the Armies of France that confidence and dash so essential to success. M. Boulanger is incontestably far more popular than all the other Generals, and M. de Cassagnac is of opinion that if he were not invested at the outset with the supreme command, and the French arms were to sustain a check, the Government of the day would be made to pay dearly for its mistake. As for M. Andrieux, he thinks that the "Boulangist movement" has taken such root in the country that if the General were now provided with a command the "agitation" would go on without him. Meanwhile, the question remains, "What is to be done with General Boulanger?" and this is exercising many minds. I pointed out at the time that the Tirard-Ministry had been guilty of a serious blunder when it turned the General loose, and people are certainly coming round to this view. This shows that M. Boulanger is not the quantité négligeable that some of his critics represent him to be.

The funeral-service and burial of the Grand-Rabbi of France M. Lazare Isidor took place this morning. The large Synagogue in the Rue des Victoires was draped externally as well as in the interior with black. At ten o'clock the bier, covered with a velvet-pall, on which were the decorations of the deceased, was placed near the pulpit in the centre of the building. Around were ranged on a raised platform all the Rabbis who were able to attend, while the choir was empty. The chair of the Grand-Rabbi of France was covered with a veil of crape. The Synagogue was crowded with people, but order was badly preserved by the beadles, and there was accordingly considerable confusion. The ceremony began by the sermon of M. Zadoc-Kahn, Grand-Rabbi of Paris, who descanted on the numerous claims which the deceased clergyman possessed to the gratitude and the remembrance of the members of his Communion and of his countrymen. After the usual Prayers and Psalms another discourse was delivered by the oldest Rabbi present—M. Mayer and the remains were then removed to the hearse. Military-honours were rendered by a detachment of infantry, and among the numerous mourners who followed the funeral to the cemetery were Baron Alphonse de Rothschild, M. Pereire, M. Camondo, M. Calmann Levy, M. Ephrussi, and many other notable Parisians. The chief-mourners were the son and son-in-law of the deceased. Discourses were also delivered at Père-Lachaise. The title of "Grand-Rabbi of France," which will now in all probability devolve on M. Zadoc-Kahn, was instituted by the First Napoleon, but the office carried no great duties or responsibilities with it. All the Rabbis being hierarchically equal, they are not subject in matters of discipline to the Grand-Rabbi of France, but to the Consistory, and, although the bearer of the chief-title has great moral influence, he never issues Orders, and never takes any important step on his own initiative.

Preparations are now being made in the little garden adjoining the Protestant church known as the Oratoire du Louvre in the Rue Saint-Honoré, for the erection of a monument to Admiral de Coligny, who was killed in the Massacre of Saint-Bartholomew on Aug. 24, 1572. The Admiral was the first victim. Hardly had the Great Bell of Saint-Germain L'Auxerrois, hard by the Louvre, tolled the signal at two o'clock on that awful morning when Henry of Guise proceeded to Coligny's house, and while he remained in the courtyard one of his satellites entered the old man's room and stabbed him to the heart, the corpse being flung out of the window, at the very feet of his treacherous enemy. The Admiral's abode, called the Hôtel de Ponthieu, was situated in the immediate vicinity of the Oratoire du Louvre, in the Rue des Fossés, Saint-Germain L'Auxerrois, at the corner of the Rue du Roule. Later on this street was incorporated in the Rue de Bethizy, but it disappeared when the Rue de Rivoli was lengthened. A tablet placed at No. 144, Rue de Rivoli shows the exact spot where the Hôtel de Ponthieu stood, and where the illustrious Admiral de Coligny was butchered. The monument, which is now completed—the cost having been defrayed by subscriptions, and with the help of the State—is the work of M. Crauck. The Admiral is represented standing with his right hand on the hilt of his sword, and his left closed on his bosom. The expression of his placid features is most pleasing. At the base of the cenotaph are two allegorical figures—one the "Mother-Country," holding a crown in her left-hand and a drawn sword in her right; the other "Religion," with the martyr's palm in her left-hand, while her right presses her breast as if to stifle the beatings of her heart. Between the two figures is an open Bible. Coligny's "arms" are engraved on the monument, as well as the quotation from Montesquieu: "L'Amiral de Coligny fut assassiné n'ayant dans le cœur que la gloire de l'Etat!" and a line setting forth that the memorial has been raised by national subscription with the assistance of the State.

A Paris gommeux or "dandy," with a weakness for the society of frail females, has just been "taken in" after a fashion which kept the court-house of the Correctional-police in a roar yesterday. The dandy summoned a demi-mondaine, named Henriette Gauthier, for having stolen a considerable sum of money and several articles of jewellery from his rooms, under peculiar circumstances. The parties were tolerably well-acquainted with one another, having met on several occasions in those nocturnal rendezvous of Paris which form the trysting-places of La haute noce. A few evenings since the prosecutor met the defendant near his residence, and she told him that she had not dined, as her mother had not returned home. The prosecutor immediately invited her to his abode, and dinner was set on the table for the two. After the soup Mademoiselle Henriette complained of violent pains, and begged her host to rush off at once to a chemist for some camomile. The obliging admirer complied at once, and on his return he found that his fair guest had flown, after having pilfered from his secrétaire and his wardrobe several bundles of bank-notes, a watch, some scarf-pins, rings, and similar articles. The woman acted with a male accomplice who was waiting for her in the street, and on this person she threw all the blame. The confederates were sentenced to long terms of imprisonment. At the same sitting a dashing Italian named Zorzi was also condemned to two years' imprisonment for having sold all the goods and chattels of an acrobatic young lady with whom he lived. The damsel is employed at the Hippodrome, and during her absence with the troupe in London her false Italian "levanted" with her effects. Zorzi is in appearance what some people call a "Greek-God," and was much admired by the artistes of the Hippodrome. He had much in common with his countryman Pranzini, who was guillotined about a year ago.

The ouvreuses, or "women who usher people into their seats" in theatres, have long been the torment and the horror of Parisian playgoers. On the night of the Opéra-Comique fire some of the ouvreuses were burned because they remained near their post until the last moment harassing the people who were flying for their lives for pourboires, or "gratuities." Those women cast a note of discomfort into the anticipated enjoyments of the playgoer as he enters his "box" or "stall" by pressing him for his overcoat, his hat, his cane, his cigar-case, or anything in fact upon which they may be able to levy a tax. Frequent Crusades have been organised against the ouvreuses, but all to no purpose, for they still ply their trade in many theatres with the utmost energy and the most unblushing effrontery. They have been reduced in number at the Opéra-Comique and the Comédie-Française, while at the Opéra there are no longer any of these ouvreuses who, in the days of old, filled up their time with stocking-knitting, crochet-work, or embroidery. They also had lotteries or raffles, and as a piece of crowning impudence offered their knitted stockings and other masterpieces of art as prizes to a much-plagued public, which included not only the abonnés and the casual frequenters of the Opéra, but the whole of the troupe itself, from the gorgeous prima-donna down to the simple flower-girl who brought in bouquets to the "Stars of Song and the Ballet." In the theatres which still employ these female Harpies the managers receive considerable sums of money for each post of ouvreuse, just as the proprietors of restaurants do from waiters. Nevertheless, the ouvreuse sometimes contrives to "strike oil." If good-looking, she attracts the notice of some wealthy abonné, just as do some of the waitresses or bonnes at Duval's restaurants, and there are not wanting among the damsels of the "European Quarter" many who have begun life as box-openers in theatres. One ancient ouvreuse, who had spent sixty years in the "profession" retired from the Opéra-Comique to a pretty country-house outside Paris, where she lives comfortably on her earnings. It is only fair to add, however, that during the day-time she rented chairs in a religious edifice, thus combining the interests of the Church and the Stage in a most satisfactory manner. In minor theatres the ouvreuse talks sociably to the parterre during the entr'actes, and gossips on the life and history of each actor and actress who comes on the stage. This kind of ouvreuse is not importunate, for she has but little to expect from the people who frequent her theatre, and it is her sister in the more pretentious establishments on the Boulevards who ought to be reformed altogether.

The painter M. Léopold Alamacher, who has just heard that one million sterling has been bequeathed to him by M. Tousset, founder of the Courrier de San-Francisco, whose life he saved in France many years ago, is the wonder and the admiration of all the good people of Versailles. A correspondent at that city, who is engaged in minute observations of the conduct and demeanour of the new Crœsus, telegraphs to-day that M. Alamacher has become calmer since the receipt of the letter which announced his good fortune. The ex-compositor, who has now given up work, and literally "burned his boats," invited all his friends and shopmates to a banquet in a Versailles restaurant, where it appears he was overcome partly by his windfall of luck and partly by some generous wines in which he indulged rather freely. In consequence of this he had to be escorted home, where a good sleep brought him round. To-day he walked through the streets of the city dressed in attire befitting his rank as a richissime, and was the observed of all observers. People who never knew him before manifested the greatest concern as regards his health and that of his wife, and enemies of long standing frequently ran up to shake hands with him.

The funeral of Castanet, the tight-rope walker, who met with his death while performing at Angers on Sunday, took place in that town this morning, and assumed quite the proportions of "an event." All the inhabitants seemed to have turned out to witness the cortège, and for more than half-a-mile the Boulevards and the adjacent streets were crammed to repletion. Castanet was the son of a lawyer at Nîmes, and the son-in-law of the well-known lion-tamer Pezon. For the last few days there have been no performances at the Menagerie out of respect for the deceased, but it is announced that it will reopen on Saturday with "a tremendous attraction." The young and disconsolate widow will on that evening enter the cage of the celebrated lion "Brutus," which, for some time past, has been kept in the background, owing to its ferocious propensities. This startling novelty is certainly calculated to draw a "full-house," and the more so as the worthy Angerins have been much impressed with the catastrophe which has occurred in their midst now they will have the opportunity of seeing "'Brutus' and the widow."

On the Bourse to-day the last quotations were: Three per Cents, 83f 05c (a fall of 5c); Four and a Half per Cents., 106f (a rise of 5c); Italians, 97f 92½c (a rise of 7½c); Turks, 14f 25c (no change); Spanish-Exteriors, [illegible]; Egyptian-Unified, 433f 75c; ditto Preference, [illegible]; and Ottoman-Bank, 550f. Suez-Canal Shares closed at 2,252f 50c, and Rio Tinto at 588f. Home Funds, after the activity of yesterday, were dull to-day, but Italian and Egyptian-Unified have again improved. There was little, if any, change in Russians, Spanish-Exteriors, and Turks.

Dated Gmunden, Sept. 19, a Reuter's telegram says: "The Queen of Hanover yesterday gave a garden party in honour of the Princess of Wales and her daughters. There were present at the gathering several members of the Austrian Imperial family, the Duchess of Wurtemberg with her children, the Duke and Duchess of Cumberland, Princess Mary of Hanover, and other distinguished personages."

The Murder of Major Barttelot.—The following telegram has been received from her Majesty to Sir Walter Barttelot, at Stopham, Pulborough: "The Queen commands me to convey to you the sincere expression of her sympathy at the death of your son.—Ponsonby." Sir Walter Barttelot was to return from Montreaux next week. The shock of the death of his son has led to a postponement of his return.

IS MARRIAGE A FAILURE?

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—I have watched with intense interest the controversy in your columns upon the subject of marriage, and have been surprised and disappointed in not having seen letters relating to such cases as mine. Knowing that there have been thousands of sufferers like myself, I venture to hope that you will publish this letter. In my case marriage has not only been a failure, but it has been the one long bitter curse of my life. Thirty-three years since, at the age of eighteen, I was serving with my regiment in India, at a hill station, and there met a lady some five years my senior, who had the reputation of being handsome, whilst I had that of being well-born and well off. Within ten days of my first introduction I married her. Alas! within twenty-four hours I realised my fatal mistake. In the first place, I found out that she had not previously led a virtuous life; and, secondly, that she was a worldly cold-hearted woman, who had married me simply on account of my position and fortune. From that time my life was changed. I tried hard to bear my lot, and for a whole year put up with her sneers, sarcasms, and flirtations with my brother officers. I volunteered and went to the war then going on, and did my best to get shot; but no friendly bullet would put an end to my wretched existence. After the war was over I returned to my wife, but found her in no way changed; and, having made an adequate provision for her, I separated from her, and sold out of the service, so as to endeavour to rid myself of all associations with which she was mixed up. A son was the fruit of our marriage, and this boy has been brought up by his mother to believe that I am a heartless scoundrel who abandoned his mother without cause.

What has been my life since? I, who was of a naturally warm-hearted and affectionate, though over-impulsive, disposition, found myself at under twenty years of age with a millstone around my neck. For a long time I fought hard to live a good life, but the remembrances of this woman grew upon me until it nearly sent me mad, and eventually drove me to drink and gamble in order to drive her memory from my thoughts. In fact, I sunk to the lowest depths of misery and degradation, with ruin staring me in the face, until about twelve years since I met a young girl who knew the whole of my past life. She entirely reclaimed me. The hard "society" world will doubtless condemn my next step, which was to run away with her. Poor child! she had never been happy at home, and had been simply a family drudge. Well, sir, eleven years have passed since then, and during that long period our lives have been passed in almost unalloyed happiness. We have never had a single difference of opinion. We have entire faith in each other. Everything we have is in common, and we are truly one in spirit as well as in flesh. Three children have been born to us. To "society" we are outcasts, and when we go to church the clergyman tells us from the pulpit that we have broken one of the Commandments, and are therefore condemned to everlasting punishment. Can this be true? I cannot, and will not believe it. The many letters you have published will possibly result in a change of the Divorce laws. Some provision ought to be made to meet such a case as mine. In America I could get a divorce without any trouble at all. Assuredly the Americans are not behind us in faith, morality, or intelligence; and yet a divorce, if thus procured, would not be recognised by either the "society" or laws of England. The "laws" of marriage were made by man in the comparatively dark ages. Surely it is high time now that they should be revised. Take, for instance, a married couple. One of them, the husband or wife, disappears, and is never heard of more; still it is not possible that the remaining one may legally marry again until either he or she as the case may be can produce the proof of the death of the other. Now, surely, there ought to be a limit of time, and ten years would certainly be a reasonable one.

Another point is, What is to become of my children? Are they to be spurned by "society" as outcasts and bastards—they, who have never had a wrong thought? Is it right that what may be called the sins of others shall be visited on their innocent heads? If this is so it may be the law of England but it is not justice.

The thorough-going revision of a law which presses so cruelly upon thousands of erring but repentant men and women is a necessity which can no longer be ignored by a nation justly renowned throughout the world for its humanitarian tendencies. The best man's life-conduct is more or less chequered with mistakes, none of which should be made irremediable by legislation. There should be mercy, as well as justice, for those whom the impulses of hot youth have prompted to inconsiderate action, for which, as matters now stand with us, they are condemned to endure life-long suffering and degradation. Leaving mercy out of the question, however, it is manifestly unjust that the matrimonial tie should be made an oppression instead of a benefit—a curse instead of a blessing. From the moment in which it assumes a penal aspect its effect upon mankind is no longer salutary, but demoralising. Of all errors committed by men and women, an ill-assorted marriage is the most pitiable; yet it is visited in this country with the severest of all punishments, that which lasts throughout life—an infliction to which death itself has been found preferable by many sufferers. If the thorough ventilation of the injustices to which our marriage laws have hitherto given rise should lead to a recast of those statutes, based upon principles of equity, and animated by a spirit of true philanthropy, you will have rendered inestimable service to many of your compatriots of both sexes, now enduring the torments of a cruel bondage, and will have established an irrefragable title to the gratitude of generations yet to come.—In the fervent hope that this will be so, I remain, Sir, yours obediently, A SOCIAL OUTCAST.

Hastings, Sept. 17.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—Nearly five years since my husband and I began life together, after an engagement of three years, so that friendship was interwoven with our mutual love and respect. Of course, I did not, as so many do, wait till after marriage to find out my husband's character. That was done before hand, and on my bridal day I could afford to dispense with the usual show of tears, knowing full well that, proving myself to be a gentle and affectionate wife, my husband would be in life, till death, my truest friend and protector. My married years have been the happiest of my life, and never has a shadow of regret clouded my mind for an instant. My duties as wife and mother bring much happiness, and our relationship, though changed hereafter, will, I hope, be purified and perpetuated for ever. Can Mrs. Mona Caird have thought of the consequences of free love, or asked herself what would be the state of our nation without the virtuous wife and mother, in whose arms our rising generations are nurtured? Let those who will cavil over our marriage service, the evil lies not in it; rather in the heedless, godless way in which responsible men and women trespass on the sanctity of marriage. No wonder they find it "a failure." There are many to whom it is in every way a success. The congenial companionship and peace and comfort of home make the daily round happy, while in the little ones we recognise that beauty of holiness with which every Christian marriage is adorned. In this matter, as in all others, as we sow, so we must reap.—Yours truly, A. L. C.

Chertsey, Surrey, Sept. 17.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—Very few of your correspondents seem to give much consideration to what appears to me to be the most important element in the union of the sexes, viz., the fitness of candidates for matrimony to transmit to their offspring healthy bodies. Unfortunately for the advancement of our common race men and women, who are mentally, morally, and physically unfit to become the parents of intelligent, virtuous, and healthy children, are allowed to marry and multiply. Is it not the duty of the State to adopt means to prevent deterioration of the race by the "multiplication of its inferior members?" Where parents possess in the highest degree all the conditions necessary for the most favourable hereditary transmission, it will be found that their offspring are capable—perhaps in accordance with natural evolution—of "correspondence with the largest environment."

"Free Contract" might do very well with the "few noble souls," but is not suited for the average frail and faulty mortal. Anything like a loosening of the marriage tie is to be deprecated. However, it is but fair to the talented lady whose article originated the present discussion to say that those correspondents who impute to her the advocacy of anything like licence in the relations of the sexes are grievously in error. That the marriage laws are faulty seems to be pretty generally admitted; but that marriage, as an institution, is not only not a failure, but is capable of the greatest happiness in this not altogether unhappy planet, one might cite the writings of John Stuart Mill, Hogg, Mrs. Craik, and hosts of others to prove. Personally I am unmarried, but, like an "American Actress," I have an ideal "snuggled" away in a quiet corner. Should the ideal ever assume tangible shape, and give her consent, I shall have no hesitation in going through the "barbaric" ceremony without any misgiving as to its proving a failure.—Yours, &c., J. MACDONALD.

Pembroke Dockyard, Sept. 17.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—As a young bachelor of twenty-six, and a business man, I greatly admire the ability of ladies who prove themselves capable of filling positions as clerks, or compete with, and in some cases excel, men in the office or warehouse. I know that there are such, and must confess that I should like to know more of them, or at least more of one of such sensible and industrious young ladies, capable of helping a hard-working young fellow in his calling. Mine happens to be a business in which a lady could fill a sphere of usefulness (not hard work by any means), and have sufficient time for all domestic requirements and leisure as well, and yet be able to increase my present income of about £400 by at least £50 or £80 more. My friends tell me that two could live comfortably on such an amount, and are ashamed of me, a good-looking fellow (so they say), for not getting married. But the fact is I cannot fall in love, having tried lots of times. If I could I should not hesitate to marry to-morrow. A rather painful example of the "failure of marriage" has been given me by one of two married brothers. Both were very comfortably off in business, but one has been simply ruined by the extravagance and idleness of his wife. She spent every penny he made in a most frivolous and useless manner, and now the silly fellow is not worth a shilling. The other is a happy fellow though married to a wife who is a bit of a tartar when she likes, but she looks after him well and his home too, and he somehow lives in it as happily as a king. It is the lucky uniting of a sweet with a sour temper.

Now of these two the first is certainly a failure, but of the second I am not so convinced. In each case, however, had his wife been previously educated into even a slight knowledge of business a calamity would have been prevented, and a happy home made truly prosperous.

I cannot believe that women by entering into useful labour lessen their chance of marriage. On the contrary it improves their opportunity by showing men what they are capable of.—Yours, &c., M. S.

Southend, Sept. 17.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—I quite agree with "Clericus." If a man wants a true and loving woman, one that will stand by him in all his joys or sorrows, he will do well to have a working man's daughter, for in that class of life there is always to be found a fit helpmate for any man. "Lady Clerk" says that a workman's daughter thinks that she is a lady as soon as she has acquired a smattering of French, &c. I, however, beg to differ from her, and very much so.

I and two of my friends are considered very well educated for our position in life, but we know no smattering of French, &c., neither do we think that we are ladies. Another of my friends, a working man's daughter, has now been married five years. She married a grocer's assistant, earning 25s a week. They have two children. Since their marriage they have never been in debt. They live as happily as any one could wish to. One of her golden rules is that she never is out when her husband returns to his home, but is always ready to greet him with a loving smile and kiss. We ourselves are engaged and propose soon to be married; therefore we hope that our marriages will not turn out to be miserable failures, as "Lady Clerk" thinks will be the case for any one who marries A WORKMAN'S DAUGHTER.

Brighton, Sept. 17.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—To-day "X." asks us to admit that the natural tendency of man is towards polygamy. I, for one, can't admit anything of the kind. I do know, however, that crowds of bachelors could be found who (at present living a hopeless, aimless life) would, if they had a ghost of a chance to marry the woman they loved, be only too ready to demonstrate to the most unbelieving that they never dreamed of, and certainly never sighed for, a happier state than monogamy.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, WILLIAM L. MEADS.

Isleworth, Sept. 12.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—I have observed with pain a tendency in your common-sense correspondents, who overflow with benevolent advice, to assume that it is the feminine element that is usually at fault where a married life is not a striking success. Will you allow me to deny this, as one who has had some experience in this matter, for, though I have only been married twice, I was engaged four times before my first marriage, and though, of course, the engagements could not be called successes, as were the marriages, still, so long as they continued, they were successful, from attention to one simple point. I can speak quite impartially in this matter, as I myself broke off none of my four engagements. On the contrary, they were broken off for me. I will not go into the details—they were painful. I have mentioned them as they have all proved to me the truth of the statement that be a man never so hideous, poor, ill-tempered, or foolish (and I admit freely that all of these qualities do in some sort attach to me), yet he can secure the affection, even the loving devotion, of a woman, and in consequence a successful married life, by a little simple kindness, consideration, and politeness. I have never seen the woman who could resist it.

Let a man behave to his wife always as if he had received a favour, and not given one by his marriage, and he will be happy. I do not see why in these scientific days this, the most important social question—the choice of a partner for life—should be left unstudied, and men unguided by aught save chance and a passing fancy. Surely some method might be established, however elementary. To begin by classification, women naturally divide themselves into three classes—the dolls, the wise, the good; and men into three corresponding ones—the butterflies, the severe, and the serious. Let every man, having first examined himself humbly and carefully, resolve to keep to his own class in his choice—and let every woman do the same. Proceeding thence, let his choice be guided by the law of "inverse proportion of income," then by the law of "essential agreement in idea," which I believe De Quincey suggested, and so forth. After complying with all the rules, let him indulge his private fancy as much as he pleases. Travel has so extended the chances of meeting a sufficient number of individuals of the opposite sex that there should be no difficulty on that point. Let the science of monogamy be studied and worked at with half the energy given nowadays to geology and sanitation, and we shall soon have a decent order and certainty, in place of the present prevailing chaos.—Yours, &c., WIDOWER.

Biggleswade, Sept. 17.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—I have been engaged some twelve months, totally unknown to the father of my fiancée, and should get married to-morrow clandestinely, could I only afford to do so. The father, being a business man, naturally is in town during the day, so knows nothing whatever of his three daughters doings during his absence. The daughters are well read, play and sing well, dance, and, above all, cook, and make their own dresses, and, financially speaking, they will be "warm." At the usual hour the father arrives home; the daughters, knowing that he does not like to see the place smothered with pins, needles, cottons, and pieces of material, have cleared them away, and are found reading some standard author. Pa kisses his daughters, and if business has not been quite to his liking during the day he makes sarcastic remarks to the mother (who is a perfect one) about the girls wasting their time reading. The mother, of course, explains that they have been busy all day. Then there is a slight breeze—which makes the girls wish they had never been born, literally speaking. Next evening out come the needles, &c., upon which the father remarks, "You might have found time during the day for such work." What are girls to do, situated as they are? Are you surprised to find them one fine day getting married to the man they love in order to escape their father's tongue? If another failure is added to the list to whom is the blame to be credited—father, daughter, or husband? I say most certainly the father.—I am, Sir, ONE WHO LOVES.

London, S.W., Sept. 18.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—I maintain that the reason so many marriages turn out miserable failures is to be found in the inequality, socially and educationally, of the contracting parties, and that if we continue to educate and bring up our children according to the present standards matters will grow worse instead of better. There are numbers of young men, like "A Victim to Etiquette," with £200 to £300 a year, anxious to marry, but unable to find "suitable partners." On the other hand, there is a corresponding number of young ladies, their equals in social position, equally desirous of securing husbands. How, then, is it that they do not come together? Simply because the young ladies in question are brought up in such a manner that an income of at least three times the amount is a sine quâ non. Men are consequently forced either to remain single or to marry girls in every way their inferiors, and if they do the latter is it surprising so many marriages turn out failures? Of course not. A man's wife must be his trusted companion and his best friend. That is the one great secret of happiness in married life; and to be this she must be his equal. We are all perfectly willing to give the "Glorified Spinsters" a wide berth, but if our other sisters were brought up with slightly less exalted ideas of their position and its necessities, there would be fewer failures in marriage, and fewer men in the position of yours truly, AN INGLORIOUS BACHELOR.

Margate, Sept. 17.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—I think it is only fair to wives generally to remind the opposite sexes of the fact that we too are troubled with mothers-in-law, who very often cause a great deal of unpleasantness betwixt man and wife. It is frequently against his mother's wish that a young man marries at all; or, on the other hand, she wishes to choose a wife for him, and, not being allowed a voice in the matter, she retaliates by exposing to the husband all manner of bad traits the poor wife is supposed to possess. This soon has the desired effect. A slight coolness arises, which increases as time rolls on. I am writing the experience of a dear young friend of mine, who married, four years ago, the son of such a woman, and, although she is thoroughly domesticated, ladylike in manners and appearance, utterly unselfish in disposition, and, when at home, she was considered to be the sunshine in a very large family, now, according to her mother-in-law's verdict, she does not possess one of these good qualities.—Yours, &c., A LOVER OF LIGHT.

Clapham, Sept. 17.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—The letter signed by "A Victim to Etiquette" has made me, though amused, very indignant. Necessity has made me, as it has many others, glad to accept a position as barmaid. Where is the disgrace? At what standard of education has "The Victim" arrived that he should gauge that of barmaid, as a whole, as being only half it should be. There are others who, like myself, have daily to attend to the whims and fancies of a parcel of self-opinionated and conceited fellows whose very ignorance of common politeness puts them completely outside the prospect of ever marrying any girl who has any self-respect. Their only idea is to parade their so-called superiority before such as myself, little thinking the disgust it creates in our minds. If these educated gentlemen would remember that fine clothes do not make fine birds, but that manners make the man, they would speedily look to their way, and not act as though the moment they are in the presence of a barmaid they have unlimited licence to say and act in a manner they would never dare to do under any other circumstances.—Yours, &c.,

Kennington, S.E., Sept. 17. A CITY BARMAID.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—"Ehemann," Notting-hill, makes a suggestion which, if followed, would go far to prevent "failures." "Ehemann" properly says an unmarried man has little opportunity of finding out what a woman really is. He might also have added, little opportunity of getting introduced to the right woman, even if he knows where to find her. It is astonishing how circumscribed is the circle of most men, and none but those who have tried it know how difficult and, in fact, impossible it is to become at all closely acquainted without becoming—in the eyes of the world and of the ladies' friends—engaged. "Ehemann" properly says how easy it would be for a married man and his wife to introduce a suitable lady. But "Ehemann" is not a fair type of married people. For pure unadulterated selfishness commend me to a couple who are themselves happily married. I have tried "Ehemann's" plan lots of times, and never yet has even an attempt at introduction been made. People always say, "Oh, I won't undertake such a responsibility." Others say, "Matches are made in Heaven; I don't believe in man-made marriages," &c. When we get rid of the silly notion that God joins people together we shall probably have some organised system of introductions, instead of the present stupid "praying and waiting." My occupation enables me to observe how many good men and true there are going through life in most unwilling bachelor and widower hood, only because they are too conscientious and too sensitive for the feelings of others to "rush in" without clear knowledge of the parties.—Yours, &c., A WIDOWER.

Ipswich, Sept. 16.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—"Experienced Lover" has rather overshot his mark when he says lady clerks will not make good wives. I, like many more, was brought up to work; we did not keep a servant, therefore I had to do my share of washing, scrubbing, cooking, and also made my own dresses. My father was not successful in business, and I had to go out and earn my own living. I chose that which would in my case be the quickest learnt, and have never regretted being a clerk, as I can now not only earn my own livelihood, but help support my mother, who is a widow, and do not feel myself that I am any the less a woman for being a CONTENTED CLERK.

Norwood, Sept. 18.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—I was married at the very early age of sixteen, and although I have now been married seven years I can safely say I have never for one moment regretted the step I took. Of course everything has not been "couleur de rose," and we have had our share of troubles, but we have shared them together as well as the happy hours. We have been blessed with four children, two of whom are living. They are our delight and joy. I fully believe that true affection, consideration for your husband in all things, sympathy with him, and a mutual forbearance with one another's faults and failings, will carry one safely and happily through married life. I for one would not change my lot, and I can emphatically state that in my case marriage has not been a failure.—Yours obediently, A CHILD WIFE.

London, S.W., Sept. 13.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—I should be sorry to think that we English girls should ever see the day when either "Free Love" should reign triumphant, or that marriage should be contracted for a certain period only. I heartily sympathise with "A Victim to Etiquette's" letter. There are many girls—I speak as one of them—just in his position. They are obliged to live away from home in order to be near their occupation, whatever it may be. They find themselves in a strange place, and having no friends in the neighbourhood drag on a most dreary and unsocial existence when their day's work is over, debarred from making any acquaintances by the "conventionality" which hedges them round in every direction, and which they most cordially detest, though they must not venture to say so. Yet these girls would make right good wives—warm-hearted and domesticated—and would speedily have the chance offered to them had they only an opportunity of meeting some of those young bachelors who have lately been bemoaning that there are so few nice marriageable girls to be met with.

In some towns, musical societies, Shakespeare clubs, &c., are formed, which give people an opportunity for some relaxation, and also for forming acquaintances; but here in the suburbs of London people seem to be too strongly imbued with the spirit of business to have time to spare to such frivolities.—Yours sincerely,

London, S.E., Sept. 19. ANOTHER VICTIM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—If you allow me I will tell the public some of my faults for their benefit, and leave my husband, if he likes, to tell his. Before many years pass we hope to celebrate our Golden Wedding, please God, and we are not tired of one another yet. But I made many mistakes. 1. Soon after marriage I was foolish enough, being only in my teens, to make some comparisons between my new home and my former one, to the disadvantage of the latter. This reached my husband's ears and irritated him a good deal. 2. I disliked some things that he fancied—say, putting his heels on the chimney piece whilst he sat on a chair before the fire. I described the act in too expressive terms. 3. I did not continue careful about tidiness in dress and table as I used to be before marriage. 4. I used to run up little bills and never liked keeping accounts, and when payment was sought my husband seemed displeased often.

No wonder these faults led my husband to seek and enjoy other society. But we had a great deal of happiness, and we might have had twice as much if I had known a little more before marriage as to the duties and dangers of a young wife.

I know how to manage my husband now, and have learned to double his pleasures, which are not many, by sharing in them. He does not put his heels on the table or the mantelpiece now, or go from home much, or drink, or smoke, or gamble. We have never had anything to spare, having a large family, but our children are a comfort and help to us and better than money.

We both think Eden has yielded the two best institutions we have—the Sabbath and marriage, and neither of them "a failure."—Yours sincerely,

Swaffham, Sept. 17. WINNY JONES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—A plan has occurred to me which I think would meet the wishes of most of your correspondents.

Let all marriages contracted before the registrar, either at his office or at Dissenting chapels, be made terminable at any time by the mutual consent of the parties, for it is plain that those whom the law has bound together the law has the power to put asunder.

Marriage in the Church of Rome being a Sacrament is indissoluble, Parliament having no power to contravene the laws of the Church, because they are the laws of God.

People would then be able to choose for themselves, either to make a civil contract, which, from due cause and mutual consent, might legally be terminated, or to be ecclesiastically married.—Faithfully yours,

Huddersfield, Sept. 19. J. R. DORE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—Allow me to point out another difficulty which a man has to contend against when seeking a life partner. A short time ago a lady friend of mine introduced me to a young lady from the country who was in town on a visit, and after the first evening I was so charmed with her that I arranged to see her again. Our acquaintance soon ripened into friendship, and I began to feel quite happy, and thought myself extremely fortunate at having found such a girl. I saw her very often, and each time liked her better. I was so convinced I had at last found my ideal, that I obtained for her an invitation to a dance, and introduced her to our family. The young lady appeared delighted, and I had every reason to believe she looked upon me not unfavourably. What was the result? At the dance I introduced her to a "friend," who, happening to be possessed of a handsomer face and more fascinating manners than I, made the best use of his opportunity, got himself invited to call, went out walks with her, and at the end of a week the young lady informed her friend who introduced us she did not quite "know which she liked better." This might, of course, be considered perfectly legitimate on the gentleman's part were he in earnest, but as I happen to know he has not the slightest serious intentions, but simply does it pour passer le temps, it seems to me hardly the thing to expect from a friend. If young fellows would only be more considerate in this respect to one another, and, when a man is trying to win a girl, favour rather than hinder him, I think it would be better for all in the end. Perhaps this is an unique experience, but I fear not.—Yours, &c., DISAPPOINTED.
